The 7 DIALS MYSTERY

By Agatha Christie

CONTINUED
A TINY BLACK MOLE

There was a silence—rather an uncomfortable silence, Bundle felt. She was still staring at though fascinated at the beautiful back in front of her. There was a tiny black mole just below the right shoulderblade that enhanced the whiteness of the skin. Bundle felt that at last the term "beautiful adventures," so often read, had a real meaning for her. She was quite certain that this woman had a beautiful face—a dark Slavonic face with passionate eyes.

She was recalled from her imaginings by the voice of the Russian who seemed to act as master of ceremonies.

"Shall we get on with our business? First to our absent comrade! No. 2!" He made a curious gesture with his hand toward the turned-down chair next to the woman, which every one present imitated, turning to the chair as they did so.

"I wish No. 2 were with us tonight," he continued. "There are many things to be done. Unsuspected difficulties have arisen."

"Have you any report?" It was the American who spoke.

"As yet—I have nothing from him. There was a pause. "I cannot understand it."

"You think it may have—gone astray?"

"That is—a possibility."

"In other words," said 6 o'clock softly, "there is—danger."

He spoke the word delicately—and yet with relish.

The Russian nodded emphatically. "Yes—there's danger. Too much is getting known about us—about this place. I know of several people who suspect. He added coldly: "They must be silenced."

Bundle felt a little cold shiver pass down her spine. If she were to be found, would she be silenced? She was recalled suddenly to attention by a word.

WHO IS NO. 7?

"So nothing has come to light about Chimneys?" Mosorovsky shook his head. "Nothing."

Suddenly No. 5 leaned forward. "I agree with Anna; where is our president—No. 7? He who called us into being. Why do we never see him?"

"No. 7," said the Russian, "has his own ways of working."

"So you always say."

"I will say more," said Mosorovsky. "I pity the man—or woman—who comes up against him."

There was an awkward silence.

"We must get on with our business," said Mosorovsky quietly. "No. 3, you have the plans of Wyven Abbey?"

Bundle strained her ears. So far she had neither caught a glimpse of No. 3, nor had she heard his voice. She heard it now and recognized it as unmistakable. Low, pleasant, indistinct—the voice of a well-bred Englishman.

"I've got it here, sir."

Some papers were shoved across the table. Every one bent forward. Presently Mosorovsky raised his head again.

"And the list of guests?"

"Here."

The Russian read them.

"Sir Stanley Digby, Mr. Terrace O'Rourke, Sir Oswald and Lady Cootie, Mr. Bateman, Countess Anna Radzky, Mrs. Macatia, Mr. James Theisger—" he paused and then asked sharply:

"Who is Mr. James Theisger?"

The American laughed.

"I guess you needn't worry any about him. The usual complete young ass."

The Russian continued reading.

"Herr Eberhard and Mr. Eversleigh. That complete the list."

"Does it?" said Bundle silently.

"What about that sweet girl, Lady Eileen Brent?"

"But you know what inventions Eileen Brent?"

S, cynically, and laughed.

"Yes, there seems nothing to worry about there," said Mosorovsky. He looked across the table. "I suppose there's no doubt whatever about the value of Eberhard's invention?"

Three o'clock made a laconic British reply.

"None whatever."

WORTH MILLIONS

"Yes," he went on, "a gold mine. Well worth a few lives," said No. "Commercially it should be worth millions," said the Russian. "And internationally—well, one knows only too well the greed of nations."

Bundle had an idea that behind his mask he was smiling unpleasantly.

"Well," said Mosorovsky, "I don't think we need discuss matters any further. You have all seen the plans. I do not think our original scheme can be bettered. By the way, I hear something about a letter of Gerald Wade's that has found—a letter that mentions this organization. Who found it?"

"Lord Caterham's daughter—Lady Eileen Brent."

"Bauer should have been on to that," said Mosorovsky. "It was careless of him. Who was the letter written to?"

"His sister, I believe," said No. 3. "Unfortunate," said Mosorovsky. "But it cannot be helped. The inquiry on Ronald Devereaux is tomorrow. I suppose that has been arranged for?"

"Reports as to local lads having been practising with rifles have been spread everywhere," said the American.

"That should be all right then. I think there is nothing further to be said. I think we must all congratulate our dear 1 o'clock and wisharms and legs. As a matter of fact, her luck in the part she has to play!" they're the sort of crowd I always "Hurrá!" cried No. 5. "To Anna!" All hands flew out in the same gesture which Bundle had noticed before.

"To Anna!"

One o'clock acknowledged the salutation with a typically foreign gesture. Then she rose to her feet and the others followed suit. For the first time, Bundle caught a glimpse of No. 3 as he came to put Anna's cloak round her—a tall, heavily built man.

Then the party filed out through the secret door. Mosorovsky secured it after them. He waited a few moments and then Bundle heard him unbolt the other door and pass through, after extinguishing the electric light.

BUNDLE RELEASED

It was not until two hours later that a white and anxious Alfred came to release Bundle. She almost fell into his arms and he had to hold her up.

"Nothing," said Bundle. "Just stiff, that's all. Here let me sit down."

"Oh, Gord, my lady, it's been awful!"

"Nonsense," said Bundle. "It all went off splendidly. Don't get the wind up now it's all over. It might have gone wrong, but thank goodness it didn't."

"Thank goodness, as you say, my lady. I've been in a twitter all the evening. They're a funny crowd, you know."

"A damned funny crowd," said Bundle, vigorously massaging her neck.

"As a matter of fact, they're the sort of crowd I always imagined until tonight only existed in books. In this life, Alfred, one never stops learning."
