THE ROAD OF LIFE

If life were a path strewn with roses,
If each rose held no sin or sadness,
And the heart knew no heartache or grief,
Would the hands of friends feel so tender
When they're held by the one in distress,
Or the words from their lips bring comfort
Like the touch of a Mother's dress?

The sorrow that comes to us daily,
And the cross that each mortal must bear Recalls how the crucified Saviour Taught us all to have courage and share
The grief and the sorrow of others
As they march through life's darkness and strife,
To keep them as if they were brothers, O'er the storm ruffled waters of life.

Paris Style Show

By ADA DE KOFOED
Associated Press Staff Writer

PARIS, March 9.—Dresses unveiled at a showing by the house of Marcel Rochas today featured liberal use of flares on the shoulders as well as on the skirts.

Rochas is using three, five, and in some cases nine flares to give skirts width. Additionally he is using them as trimming on long crinoline evening frocks, in styles in sheer organdie and Scotch tartan.

This designer also is making lavish use of fringe on shoulders and edging large fishy collars and bordering hip basques.

Belted Canadiane jackets in bright shades topped pieced Scottish skirts were contrasting attractions.
