IMPROVED TELEGRAPH SERVICE.

The development of wireless telegraphy is always learned of with interest by the residents of this Province. In dealing with the development in England and its proposed adoption in the post offices the Scientific American says:

"Some months ago, when the utility and widespread advantages of Marconi's invention were conclusively established, a Departmental Commission of the English Post Office was formed to consider the merits of the system and the advisability of its adoption throughout the British postal service. The report of this commission is now complete, and it is stated to relate favorably upon the scheme in its general principle.

"The result of this commission consequently portends a great revolution of the English telegraphic service. For several months past the telegraph authorities have been endeavoring to satisfactorily cope with the exigencies of the rapidly increasing telegraph traffic, but the country is so comparatively small, and the congestion of the traffic so acute, that practically no headway has been made toward the solution of the difficulty. If Marconi's system were employed the possibility of blocks on the lines would be entirely obviated, since each telegraph office would have its own synchronized receiver, and only the transmitter corresponding with that receiver would be able to establish communication there-with. Then, again, in stormy weather widespread damage is caused to the wires, frequently destroying communication, while in connection with Marconi's system it has been proved to work better in boisterous weather. These salient characteristics have impressed the commission, and have no doubt appreciably influenced their favorable decision.

"Yet the scheme will have to be well prepared, since its innovation is attended with numerous difficulties, some of which can only be obviated by Parliamentary measures. For instance, the British Post Office has a monopoly in any system of telegraphy, and it is only natural to expect that they will endeavor to enforce these rights in the present case. In this event Marconi will be prevented from establishing independent installations without the official license. It is generally believed that at the present time the Post Office does actually claim the monopoly of wireless telegraphy in the British Isles, and that Marconi has not yet received the necessary license to install his system.

The belief is somewhat supported by the fact that the English government will not permit wireless telegraph communication to be transmitted from a point less than three miles from the shore. This fact was established at the inauguration of the system upon the mail packet service between Dover and Ostend, when the authorities would not permit the establishment of a land station at Dover. The Post Office is awarded this monopoly by act of Parliament, and it is practically certain that if necessary they will enforce that prerogative. But such a contingency is hardly likely to arise. Marconi has placed himself at the disposal of the commission and has extended them every assistance in his power, in order that the advantages of the system might be thoroughly understood. That the system will be nationalized there is not the slightest doubt, as in the cases of the telephone and the District Messenger Agency of London.

"For once England is desirous of leading the way. Negotiations have already been opened with one or two of the European powers, concerning the idea of establishing the system partially, if not entirely upon the Continent. By this means the cables will be dispensed with, and the international messages transmitted through the air. Of course there is the question of expense, because such a radical revolution could not be effected except with a great outlay. Yet the system is cheap to install, for the cost is limited to the purchase of transmitters and receivers. Wires, poles, and cables are entirely dispensed with. It will even be unnecessary to erect the lofty pole in connection with the apparatus, since Marconi has invented a cylindrical application which performs the same functions with equal satisfaction.

"Another instance of England's desire to encourage the utilization of the system is proved by the decision of the Admiralty to equip all the vessels in the fleet with the apparatus. Several ships are already supplied, but those which are yet deficient in this respect are being fitted with all possible speed. Certainly the action of the British authorities will be followed with keen interest by the other nations, and should Great Britain decide upon its immediate introduction other nations will be compelled to do likewise."

There are times when a horse knows more than man; when instinct is superior to reason. The horse fights against being forced over the brink of a precipice which he can see in the dark but which is veiled from the man's eyes. It is often the same with a man's body; it fights against carrying the man over the brink of the precipice of disease. When the heart beats irregularly, when there are pains in the head, ringing in the ears, cough, indigestion, loss of appetite and lack of energy—some or all of these symptoms—the body is on the brink of danger and is crying "help!"

No man need be carried over the fatal brink of disease if he will heed Nature's warning and accept her help. This help in its most concentrated and perfect form is contained in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This great alterative extract completely modifies every abnormal condition of the disordered digestive or alimentary functions. It makes the stomach strong, the blood rich and healthy, builds up the nerve centers and so regulates the functions of all the vital organs, that they co-operate perfectly for the health of the entire system. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or other intoxicant.

Mr. Geo. Minter, of 237 Thompson Street, Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "Some time ago I was terribly run down. Numerous ailments had been coming upon me one by one. I decided to try 'Golden Medical Discovery' and the 'Pleasant Pellets.' The benefit derived was beyond my fondest hopes. I took five bottles of 'Discovery' and used the 'Pellets' when necessary. During the time of taking the five bottles as directed, I gained in weight 24 pounds, weighing more than ever in my life; bringing me health and strength, and removing these ailments, viz: palpitation of the heart, sleepless nights, pressing and splitting pains in the head, ringing in the ears, with partial deafness and throbbing, a nagging cough, indigestion, depression of spirits, loss of energy, constipation, a tired feeling upon rising and through the day, appetite poor, sight defective, very nervous, etc. Those golden bottles of your 'Discovery' and the 'Pellets' removed all those troubles, and made me as well as fifty as I have ever been in my life."

Decayed Teeth!

"There was never a Philosopher who could endure a Toothache Patiently."

Decayed teeth generally ache. If they are not in a state of chronic ache, they are ready to ache on the slightest provocation. Decayed teeth in the jaws are always a source of uneasiness and dread. They should not be allowed to remain. With the present advanced methods of treating and extracting as practised in the Baltimore Dental Rooms, the ridding oneself of these disturbing factors is a painless and satisfactory matter.

Among the many aids to perfection in our work we may mention a process for the immediate extraction of pulp, which enables us to treat and fill a decayed tooth at one sitting—the nerve being painlessly extracted. Extracting teeth is attended with no discomfort under our famous "Eurepa" process. All instruments sterilized immediately after being used.
