IMMENSITY OF CANADA—THE HUDSON BAY ROUTE.

More and more the extent, the resources, the potential wealth and rapid development of Canada are impressed upon the British mind and occupy increasing space in the press of the United Kingdom. For years past our territorial area has been quite as broad as it is now, but it did not challenge attention. The French King's contemptuous characterisation of Canada as a vast, barren acreage of snow had apparently become fixed in the British as well as the continental mind.

All this is now changed. A notable series of articles in the London Times shows that Hudson Bay and the adjoining regions, instead of being an unnavigable polar sea and a frozen wilderness, are capable of playing a by no means inconsiderable part in the future development of Canada. "If the prairie region has proved another Russia," says Public Opinion, then the Hudson Bay region can yet prove itself another Scandinavia and Finland, no less capable than these countries of supporting a hardy and industrious, though scattered population." No doubt Earl Grey's recent northern tour has been a moving cause for these and other favorable comments.

But to return to The Times. Here is an extract from a recent article: "It is when we consider a region such as this, and then remember that there are other regions as extensive and far richer within the Empire—regions like Northern British Columbia or the new Northwest beyond Edmonton in Canada, like Rhodesia or East Africa—still practically untouched, that we begin to realize the immensity of the heritage possessed by men of British race anh the immensity of the economic and political task before them if they wish to maintain and develop it."

As with the opening up of the prairie country and the construction of our first transcontinental railway, so the projected construction of the Hudson Bay Railway and the opening up of a new route for seaborne commerce, tapping the very heart of the North American continent, was at first received with doubt and distrust by many. But so far in Canadian development and progress the boldest forecasts of the men of faith have been justified in a marvellous manner by results. Lord Grey is evidently convinced of the practicability of the great northern short sea route, and believes that Hudson Bay can and will be made a northern Mediterranean, wholly Canadian and of vast commercial possibilities. This faith is spreading in the Old World as well as in Canada.

And what the new route may mean as a new and shorter highway for the products of the teeming Northwest, is only a little more important than what it may yet mean for the defence of the Dominion. It is a covered way and a back entrance, easily guarded so long as Britain shall hold the supremacy of the sea, and may prove invaluable to Britain as well as to Canada should other lines by which British food supply is obtained ever be seriously menaced.

MAKING THE BIG FELLOWS BEHAVE.

It is hard sometimes to make a man of great wealth or power, a millionaire, a coal baron, a steel king or a big railway magnate, behave himself as a good citizen among his fellow citizens, obeying the law and respecting the rights of others as he ought to do. Such men are accustomed to have their way, and if they cannot get it fairly they will try other means. Such men often have in addition to the power of wealth, what is known as a political "pull." They have little fear of the law, as they can command the service of the best legal talent to gain delay and wear out a less wealthy opponent. So it has fallen out in all ages and countries that when an Ahab covets a Naboth's vineyard he is not always scrupulous as to the means of obtaining it, and the remedy is hard to obtain.

Not that all or most of those who hold wealth or power in free countries are of this unscrupulous class—far from it. Never was the world so rich as it now is in great examples of men of wealth who hold their wealth in trust for their fellowmen and delight in bestowing it for worthy objects. These do not need to be held in check or made to behave themselves properly. But there is another class of the rich and the powerful, the crooks in high life, whose intolerant ways, whose disregard of the rights of others and whose cool, calculating rascality needs to be met and thwarted, and Col. Roosevelt is "after them" in his own strenuous fashion.

"I don't care where he lives," says the promoter of the New Nationalism, "or what party he professes, or what church he belongs to if he is a good, straight American, who does his work fairly or squarely, then I am for him. But I am against the crook. If you strike a laboring man who is a crook, I am against him. If you strike a rich man who is a crook, I am against him. There is just this difference. A crooked small man in business we can leave to his own immediate neighbors. If a grocer cheats, we can safely leave him to the people with whom he deals and the neighbors right around him; but when you get a man with $100,000,000, then he is a neighbor of all of us, and so it becomes the affair of all of us to see that he manages his business honestly and straightly."

This is good talk and it is just as good for Canada as for the United States. This sort of New Nationalism should know nothing of national boundaries and may safely be admitted into the Dominion free of duty. Like Col. Roosevelt, we hope the trust manager, the combinester, and the magnate, the "big-business" man will do right, but if he doesn't, then the people should assert their power, not to ask decent conduct of the big man as a favor, but to demand it as a right.

Rich men and rich corporations, too, are necessary to the carrying on of big operations. Their wealth and influence may be of great benefit. But when their wealth and power are used for selfish and unscrupulous ends, to tax the masses that their own coffers may overflow, then it is time for all good citizens to combine to make the big fellows behave. And it can be done if the people resolutely set about it.

Any of His Majesty's ships will always be heartily welcome to the loyal port of Charlottetown. The captain and officers of the Cornwall are the more welcome on account of their previous visits here.

These are the days of falling leaves, in the great forests, the lesser woodlands and the parks. The glory of the autumn with its varied tints is departing swiftly. The frosts and storms give warning that winter will shortly be upon us. But never yet was a winter that was not followed by another spring.

We trust that the annual meeting of the Children's Aid Society, which is fixed for next Monday evening, will be kept in mind by the worthy citizens who take an interest in the neglected little ones. The work of the society, organized under the excellent legislation of last session, is as yet but partially organized. It is worthy of the good counsel and hearty co-operation of all. The meeting will be held in the Stipendiary Magistrate's court room.

For the first time in this flying age a man is apparently attempting to soar through the air across the Atlantic. Should he succeed, the event will mark an epoch in history, equal to that of the first telegraph cable connection. The British and Irish Channels have been crossed and the Alps as well, by dirigible balloons or aeroplanes. The latter cannot yet venture so long a flight as that from America to Europe. It is in a dirigible balloon that Walter Wellman and his crew of six are now making the attempt. We hope they may succeed, but the peril is great, for this is a season of gales on the Atlantic. But wireless telegraphy, with which the airship is equipped, will enable the bold navigator to communicate with stations on shore, or with ships sailing the sea beneath him so that tidings of his progress, or of possible mishaps may reach the outside world from day to day.

AFTER SUFFERING YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Fox Creek, N.B.—"I have always had pains in the loins and a weakness there, and often after my meals my food would distress me and cause soreness. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me much good. I am stronger, digestion is better, and I can walk with ambition. I have encouraged many mothers of families to take it, as it is the best remedy in the world. You can publish this in the papers." — Mrs. WILLIAM BOURQUE, Fox Creek N.B., Canada.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

SUITS IN COLLEGE STYLE

THE College Cut is the style of suit that appeals to the young men—and most young men will have no other sort.

THERE is a certain dash and finish in the typically well dressed college man's clothes, quite different from ordinary business styles.

FOR many years we have made close study of College Clothes having just this air of smart campus style.

WE take pleasure in showing the young man who's looking.

THE cut shows two of our favorite models the fabrics are as smart and classy as the cut and tailoring.

WE have also two and three button in Double Breasted Suits

OBITUARY.

There passed away at the Head of Hillsborough on Oct. 4th, after an illness of two months, which she bore with admirable patience, Margaret Alice Douglas, relict of the late William Jardine. Deceased, who was in her 70th year, was a most estimable woman, kind and obliging, and will be missed by all who knew her. Being a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, she died as she had lived, trusting in the merits of her Redeemer. She leaves to mourn four sons—Albert at home, Artemas of the P. E. I. R., William of Cambridge, Mass., contractor; Dr. George of North Wiltshire, and four sisters—Mrs. George Jay, Mt. Stewart; Mrs. Percy Coffin, Savage Harbor, and Misses Annie and Amelia, nurses in Boothby Hospital, Mass. The funeral was held on the 6th and largely attended, eighty carriages following the remains to the old church cemetery, West St. Peters.

Each lonely place shall her restore,
In her, the tear be duly shed,
Beloved, till life can charm no more,
And mourned till pity's self be dead.
