KUMFORT HEADACHE POWDERS

Since their introduction in 1896 has been built up on MERIT and MERIT alone. This has caused a number of imitations to appear but they lack the merit of the Genuine. Avoid substitutes, which you know nothing about and which often contain opiates and other dangerous drugs.

Demand and insist on KUMFORT Headache powders and avoid cheap substitutes. Remember there is nothing "just as good," as in that case the article would be good enough to sell on its own Merits.

Kumfort Headache Powders are not an unknown quantity, but are endorsed by physicians who are familiar with the formula.

HOW OUR SINGERS WILL BE HEARD A CENTURY HENCE

d'Andante, whose voice was the envy of artistic America, was to sing the numbers of the tri-tone Marguerite; Signor Penseroso, the tenor whose range, power and sweetness had never been equalled, was to be that sublime singer, Faust. It was a musical occasion more than momentary; it was eternal.

Behind the curtain, despair, agony, madness! Both d'Andante and Penseroso—soprano and tenor—so hoarse with indignation that, though they would be able to struggle through their roles, artistic failure was inevitable.

"Ruin—ruin!" shrieked Monsieur Suro, as he laid another handful of hair on the wig. "Out of my way!" And he hurled aside a purple blood-spattered old man, M. Worms, the librettist of the Opera, who had stepped up to him.

But something in the old librettist's parchment visage stayed his ire. M. Worms found his chance to speak.

"Monsieur—my friends! I have come to save you!"

THE curtain rose. The distinguished audience—eager, anxious to be pleased—turned child with the first notes of the two famous singers. Cold, this night of all nights. What a catastrophe! Those old actors, magnificent in their song, were gone for this generation of the year 2008 made for as they were, if only d'Andante's and Signor Penseroso were able to attack successfully a single aria, a solitary solo! Perhaps one of them may recover. Let us wait, let us hope.

Could a miracle happen—could two miracles happen? It was unbelievable, yet it was true. The first miracle when Penseroso intoned Faust's apostrophe, "All Hail, Thee Dwelling, Lowly and Pure," was so wonderfully, so divinely sweet that it was as though the very spirit of melody, in pity for its devotees, had entered into the hapless tenor's throat.

The second—ah, the second! France can never forget the thrill, the exultant exaltation which uplifted the audience of the Grand Opera on that memorable night of the year 2008, when the cascade of golden notes poured forth in the Jewel Song of Marguerite. Surely heaven, seeking to win back to virtue these recalcitrant human souls, must have loaned to that one song the voice of some leader of its angelic choir.

As, later, the thousands departed, the artists of the Opera, led by the august M. Suro, betook themselves in solemn procession to the dusty den of the aged philosopher, who crowned him with a flower chaplet, and presented him with the dial of the clock of hair rescued from the purple of the libretto.

M. Suro wept, and presented him with the dial of the clock of hair rescued from the purple of the libretto. M. Suro wept, and presented him with the dial of the clock of hair rescued from the purple of the libretto.

TEARS OF HAPPINESS

M. Worms wept, Signor Penseroso wept, Mme. d'Andante wept, M. Suro wept some more. Then amid the tears of happiness, M. Worms, patting the tall mahogany cabinet, told the story of their common deliverance.

"It is, indeed, marvelous. Among the archives I found the manuscript. It was dated just a century ago. It told how one M. Alfred Clark, an American, approached the directors of the opera. He asked them whether they would be pleased if, at that time, they could hear the glorious voice of Moliere's Faust, the comedies, of Talma declaiming the lines of Corneille or Racine, of the long silent and dead Sophie Arnould singing an air of Rameau or of Gluck. They were astonished with the vain regrets he aroused. Then he asked whether they would afford the pleasure of the ages to come those joys of which they themselves were deprived by the scientific impetuosity of the ages past. They were ravished at the thought, this so magnificent American, undertook it all—the trouble and the expense. M. Hardy, one of our chemists eminent in the year 1908, was called upon to solve the problem of the preservation of the discs which preserve the voices. He pondered long upon it, and at length introduced into their composition a chemical which made deterioration impossible.

"You can imagine," continued the old librarian, with innocent zeal in those reminiscences, so respectfully heard by the leaders of the world of music, "what
