SOLUTION OF MYSTERY OF LIFE NEARER THAN EVER BEFORE, SCIENTIST THINKS

NEW YORK, April 4.—Dr. W. H. Howell, of Johns Hopkins University, one of the deans of the country's scientists, said tonight there is a possibility that the solution of the mystery of life lies a little nearer than it ever has before.

"Some promise of advance in this direction," he said before the American Societies for Experimental Biology, "seems to be suggested in a new development in organic chemistry in which high molecular compounds are being studied by methods differing from any employed hitherto.

"If this study is successful, we may take hope that sometime we may have an inkling of what is the structure of living matter."

Dr. Howell said presumably the secret of living matter lies in the organization of its material; it lies in its intermolecular as well as in its molecular structure."

MORE SQUARE YARDS OF CLEANING

... in a package of Old Dutch than in anything else you can buy, because Old Dutch is the only cleanser made of pure "seismotite," scientifically recognized as the safest, most efficient and most economical cleaning material. Safest because it doesn't scratch; it is free from harsh, sandy grit found in ordinary cleansers. Most efficient and economical because its flaky, flat-shaped particles cover more surface, go further and do more actual cleaning per penny of cost.

Old Dutch costs less to use because it cleans more square yards of surface, cleans quicker, doesn't clog drains, is odorless and removes odors. And it does so many more cleaning tasks perfectly that it is the only cleanser you need in your home.

Reversing Falls Still Maintain Strong Interest

(By John Mosher)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)
(By The Canadian Press)

SAINT JOHN, N.B., April 4—Twice every 24 hours one of the world's phenomena may be seen at the outskirts of Saint John, only a few minutes from the heart of tht city. Located in the St. John river a short distance from the point where it enters the harbor proper, the famous reversing falls have been described by explorers and writers since Champlain first gazed upon the tumbling waters. People in far parts of the world think of Saint John as the place of the reversing falls, and they are perhaps the chief attraction for tourists visiting this district.

Where the river narrows to a width of 350 feet between limestone banks nearly 100 feet tall, a huge volume of water rushes downward at low tide, making a turbulent rapid among the sharp, rocky ledges forming the river bed at that point. As the tide rises between 20 and 30 feet in Saint John harbor it meets the river current, overcomes it, and the flow of water is reversed with the Atlantic brine rushing upwards over the falls at great velocity. This struggle between current and tide occurs twice every 24 hours. At other times the waters are comparatively quiet.

Until last year these were believed to be the only reversing falls in the world. A Canadian hydrographic survey expedition discovered a similar phenomenon in an uncharted fyord on the southeastern coast of Baffin Land. The falls there were reported to be caused by incoming and outgoing tides rushing over a ledge projecting from the bed of the fjord.

"The only other example of the phenomenon is to be found in the St. John river at Saint John, New Brunswick," the expedition's announcement said.

New Brunswick Indians accounted for the Saint John falls as follows, according to a booklet by Dr. J. Clarence Webster, historian of Shediac, N. B.

Glooscap, the Indian god who controlled nature and the animals, was informed that the Big Beaver, another mythological character, was annoying other animals. Despite an admonition from Glooscap, Big Beaver continued to misbehave in the Passamaquoddy district so Glooscap went after him. The Beaver evaded a meeting, fled to the mouth of the St. John river (Men-ah-questk) and built a dam across it so high that the country was flooded for many miles, resulting in a Jim-quispam or huge lake (the present Grand Lake).

When Glooscap returned to Saint John from his fruitless quest and saw the dam he smote it with his mighty club, breaking the weapon. A piece of it was carried by the rushing water to a point outside the harbor where it became imbedded and formed an island (now called Partridge Island). Glooscap finally found and killed Big Beaver.

The split-rock below the falls was Glooscap's club, which he threw there after smashing the dam. The Indian name for the falls means "the beaver's rolling dam."

An account of the falls was written by Nicholas Denys after he visited Saint John in the seventeenth century. He referred particularly to the great whirlpool which exists at flood tide, when floating objects often are caught and moved around for hours. In the old days a huge log had been held in the pool for a long period, its end appearing above water for a time and then disappearing, perhaps for days.

The Indians believed the log to be a Manitou (devil). When it was not visible they believed the Manitou was angry. When in sight they paid it homage by fastening beaver and other skins to it with arrow heads. Denys was told that Charles La Tour, Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia in 1631, had failed in trying to draw the log out with boats.

Glooscap, incidentally, has been termed the most Aryanlike of any mythological character evolved from a savage mind. Indians believed him to be a super-man who lived among them and acted like all men excepting that he was invisible, never sick, never grew old and was immortal. He lived unmarried in a large wigwam with an old lady, termed grandmother, who kept his house and was his servant. He controlled the forces of nature and was obeyed by the animals. His favorite residence was Cape Blomidon on the Basin of Minas, N. S., which was called Glooscapweek (Glooscap's home).

GRINDING VALVES AGAIN?

Forced to lay your car up for valve grinds two and three times a year? That's nothing to what R. G. Brown, of a Toronto real estate firm, went through. But he writes us that everything's all right now!

"When we first got our car, which has a very high compression motor, we had to remove carbon every 500 miles. Adjustments improved conditions so we could drive about 3000 miles. Last Spring, while driving North from Florida, we filled up with Quaker State. Using this oil, we drove some 6,200 miles . . . and could have gone further, but decided to remove what carbon there was."

Why does ordinary oil stir up trouble? Because it's loaded with a thin, watery material called "light-end" oil. There's one quart of this, more or less, in every gallon. It burns up, vaporizes, blows away. Your car doesn't get full lubrication.

To be sure of perfect lubrication, constant lubrication, use nothing but genuine Quaker State. No "light-end" material . . . it's removed at the refinery. You get an extra quart of lubrication in every gallon.

Look for the Quaker State sign . . . displayed by automobile dealers, service stations, and garages throughout Canada. Quaker State Oil Refining Company of Canada, Limited, Toronto, Ontario.
