BROKEN WINGS by Barbara Webb

"I think I'll buy this one," the girl in the blue ensemble remarked casually, as casually as though the purchase of a $15,000 airplane were a daily occurrence.

Billy Daly, the salesman, detailed from active flying to the air show, thought she was being funny. "Shall I wrap it up for you or would you like it sent around tomorrow morning?" he asked.

He was treated to a cold stare from stormy blue eyes, and as he noted the color of her red gold hair showing on either cheek, he heard her say: "See, please, that it is in the Airclub hangar as soon as it is possible for you to deliver it. I want this particular model, you understand." She turned and called to a middle-aged man who was inspecting a neighboring plane. "Father, will you give this man a check of some kind. I'm going to buy this ship and I want it delivered right away."

Billy Daly straightened himself. Good grief, what an idiot he had been. Those simple, smart clothes she wore meant money, of course. That final, quiet tone—"I'll take this one"—meant she could buy what she wished. That mention of the Airclub, the most expensive clubhouse near New York, where society was pursuing its new hobby, aviation, meant an entree into realms where money flowed like water and was as generally used, this was a real sale, the first one he had ever made.

He turned eagerly to the girl, his filippic manner gone. "I'm sorry, honestly, I thought you were just kidding, so many people do, you know. I'm not much of a salesman, I'm really a pilot, and I'm new to this racket. I sure was goofy to think you were jollying me."

The girl shrugged an indifferent shoulder. "It doesn't matter," she said. Her father, stout and well fed, joined them now and Bill led the way to the office, where sales details were completed. The immense spaces of Grand Central Palace were crowded with sightseers come to view the newest models in airplanes. Every size and description of plane was on display. Aviation trophies, huge announcements of prices and specifications, eager salesmen, pilots deaf to the crowds but alive to the beauties of the gleaming new planes, gave the wide stairways and spacious exhibition rooms a gala air.

Bill thrilled to it. He swelled with pride. And he glanced with grateful interest at the girl beside him. She was a peach. Pretty—see, yes. And that blue coat-dress with the soft gray fur at the throat and the little hat, blue shot with silver, that hugged her bright hair so closely, didn't it set her off from the other women present? Presently he'd know her name. Maybe she'd let him fly that sweet plane she was going to buy, take her up for the first time. She wasn't very talkative; she hadn't said another word to him. But she'd

Do You Value Health?

Sickness Almost Always Due to Weak, Watery Blood

If your health is poor; if you are pale, nervous and easily tired; if you suffer from headaches or backaches; if there are touches of indigestion, or twinges of rheumatism, you may depend upon it that these symptoms come from an impoverished condition of the blood, and that unless this condition is remedied a complete breakdown may follow. To any who are in this condition, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will be found the perfect medicine. The whole mission of this medicine is to build up the blood, promote appetite and good digestion, and strengthen tired, frayed nerves. Men and women alike benefit through the use of this medicine. Therefore if you are weak or ailing, give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial and you will be pleased with the beneficial results that will speedily follow.

Among the thousands who have found Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a real blessing is Mrs. Geo. M. Andrews, Halifax, N. S., who says:—"My first experience with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills was an anemic young girl, when they completely restored my health. Then a few years ago I became pale and run down, and my husband got a supply of the pills for me. I gave them a good trial and when my baby was born she was a big healthy baby and I did not have a day's sickness. My friends all tell me how well I look and I certainly feel that way, and I gave all the credit to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I hope my experience will help some other woman who needs a good medicine. You can get the pills from your druggist, or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

thaw—they always did when Bill Daly handed them his line. Bill liked girls. Of course, flying came first, but girls were good fun, especially the kind that went in for flying.

"ENGAGED!"

At the door of the office the girl stopped. "There's Jackson," she said to her father. "I'm going to have him come in and suffer while I buy this airplane."

Bill was astonished at the malice in her tone, a tinge of mockery in her face, as she called to a tall, distinguished-looking man, older than herself: "Oh, Jackson, do come here; I'm buying a plane, a precious little plane all for myself."

There was a distinctly annoyed expression on the man's face as he came toward them. Bill had an impression that "Jackson" disliked the crowd, hated to be brushed against, would prefer to go home and soak in a scented bath to remove the taint of the evening's jaunt. Bill decided that he didn't care for "Jackson." And what the heck had this lovely girl do with an old fossil like that? Her brother? He opened the office door and stood aside for his clients to enter.

"Jackson was talking," Really, Kitty, this is an impossible fad of yours. If you'll allow me, Mr. Boyd, I think you should forbid her doing anything so outrageous as buying this plane."

"So her name's Kitty," Bill said to himself. The girl laughed. "Calm down, Jackson. You can't do any forbidding yet, you know. And don't be so pompously superior."

"And she can scratch," Bill added to himself. "No, Kitty I can't stop you now, but as soon as we're married you're going to give up the wild idea, let me tell you that," Jackson said acidly.

"Engaged!" Bill thought dimly. "And to that skunk in side whiskers." Kitty's father cleared his throat. "You sure that this young man's airplane is the one you want?" he said to his daughter.

"Oh, yes; I like the color and the lines—"

"It's got a perfect engine," Bill broke in. "Mechanically it's the best thing in the show."

"And it's slim and graceful, like a falcon—that's what I'll call it, 'The Falcon.' What's the line, Jackson, about a falcon towering in her pride of place?—you ought to quote poetry more; it's soothing when you're in a temper."

Mr. Boyd looked uneasily from his daughter to her fiancé. "Don't carry on that way, Kitty. This is business. Now, let's see, the price of the plane is $15,000—suppose I give you a check now for $5000 and the balance on delivery."

Bill nodded, his throat a little dry. Five thousand dollars! Like nothing! He managed to speak, "I'm sure that will be satisfactory. I think they'd like to keep the ship here for the rest of the show, another five days, but you can have it right after that."

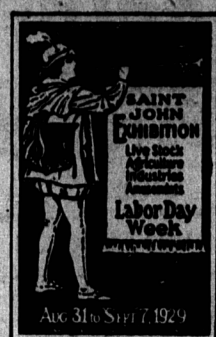

"Splendid," Kitty said. "But sure you have the sale in my name, Father. It's my ship, you know, and I mean to keep it."

This last remark was directed at Jackson with some defiance. Bill saw the man, wince as Mr. Boyd completed the writing of the check and handed it to Bill. "I'll bet he's a tightwad, this Jackson person," Bill thought. Aloud he said, "I just can't thank you enough Mr. Boyd, and Miss Boyd. I've never sold a plane before and maybe I'll never sell another one, but this is just one swell break for me."

Mr. Boyd shook hands with him. Kitty gave him an indifferent nod. Jackson ignored him completely and the door closed behind them. Bill stood staring at the check. "Five grand! Oh, boy, some little commission on this deal for Bill Daly. One thousand five hundred dollars! Ten percent! Gee, it took about half an hour to close the sale; that's fifty dollars a minute."

He chuckled. Then he executed a quick right shuffle and snapped his fingers. The door opened on this exhibition of enthusiasm and Bill found himself looking at the most overpoweringly dignified woman he had ever seen in his life.

SNUBBED
"I am looking for my daughter," she said, glancing in her voice.
Bill pretended to look in his pocket. "She's not in here, ma'am. You might ask at the last-and-found window," he'll put a ticket on her there and keep her cheerfully until called for."
"You are speaking to Mrs. S. Franklin Boyd. I was told my daughter came in here to complete her purchase of an airplane." Icicles tinkled in every word.
Bill felt the red rush into the roots of his hair. His nonchalance departed. He stammered, "I'm—I'm—terribly sorry. M-m-miss Boyd just left. I'll find her for you—I'll—I'll find her for you—"

Double distilled fool that he was! How could he know that this iceberg was the mother of the loveliness that was Kitty Boyd? He fled from the room, and Mrs. Boyd sat down unmoved to wait for his return with Kitty.

Bill found her with her father and Jackson, inspecting a baby moth plane. Apparently they had been having an argument. "I bought the Falcon, if you must know, Jackson, because it was so much more expensive than one of these little fellows."

Before Jackson could answer, Bill touched Kitty's arm. "Please, Miss Boyd, I hate to interrupt you, but your mother is waiting in the office. She's been looking for you." He ventured to add in a lower tone, intended only for her ears, "I got terribly fresh with her; I'm scared to go back."

In Memoriam

MR. PROSPER BLACQUIER.

The death took place at his home in North Rustico on Sunday morning at 3 o'clock, after an illness of two years, which confined him to his bed from a paralytic stroke, of Mr. Prosper Blacquier, at the age of eighty-two years. He leaves to mourn three sons and three daughters. The sons are Michael, Angus and Jerry, on the old homestead at North Rustico. The daughters are Mrs. Myrtle Gallant, Mrs. Andrew Dolron, both of Mayfield, and also Mrs. Andrew Martin, of Charlottetown. He also leaves to mourn one sister, Mrs. Paul Arbing, and one brother, Mr. Peter Blacquier, both of North Rustico. Forty grandchildren and ten great grandchildren also survive. The funeral, which was held on Monday morning at 9 o'clock, to North Rustico Chapel, was largely attended. He received the last rites of the Holy Catholic Church, administered by Father Chaisson, the Parish Priest. He was laid to rest in North Rustico cemetery, and will be sincerely missed by his bereaved family. The pall-bearers were Messrs. Joseph Blacquier, Joseph Gallant, Edgar Dolron, Adolphe Fleming, Henry Peters and Bruno Dolron. May his soul rest in peace.

Keep Children Well During Hot Weather

Every mother knows how fatal the hot summer months are to small children. Cholera, infantum, diarrhoea, dysentery, colic and stomach troubles are rife at this time and often a precious little life is lost after only a few hours illness. The mother who keeps Baby's Own Tablets in the house feels safe. The occasional use of the Tablets prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if trouble comes suddenly—as it generally does—the Tablets will bring the baby safely through. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

and one sister, Mrs. William MacLeod, of Vancouver, B.C.

The funeral was held from the residence of Mr. Amos Rodd, North Milton, on the afternoon of July 23. Rev. C. F. Johnson, rector, of St. John's church, Milton, assisted by Rev. J. M. MacLeod, of Charlottetown, conducted the service at the home and grave.

The pall-bearers were Messrs. Walter, Joseph and Gordon MacLeod, nephews of the deceased; Daniel M. MacDonald, Roderick MacLeod and William G. Darke.

Interment was made in the family plot at Hartsville.

A COMEDY OF ERRORS.

The official signature of an Anglo-American Bishop consists of his initials followed by the name of his see in full, and this circumstance once led to a comical mix-up. After the battle of Waterloo an avenue of beeches was planted on the Duke of Wellington's estate as a memorial of the great fight. Some years afterwards an eminent landscape-designer and authority on botanical matters, named J. C. Loudon, wished to inspect the trees and wrote to the Duke as follows: "My Lord Duke, — It would
