Margaret O'Brien Delightful In M-G-M Comedy Attraction

You loved her in "Journey for Margaret" and adored her in "Lost Angel"—so you'll probably just as quickly mad over little Margaret O'Brien, filmdom's number one sweetie-art, in her latest role in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Canterville Ghost," which opens today at the Prince Edward Theatre.

In this film version of Oscar Wilde's celebrated story, Margaret co-stars with Charles Laughton, who plays the title role, and Robert Young, who is hailed as one of the most reliable performers in the film capital—actor's actor, is the phrase—does his usual superb job. And little Margaret, as you have gathered, is her father's sweetest self as an actress and as a person.

Arthur L. Field has provided the usual handsome M-G-M production, and the company of supporting players leaves nothing to be desired since it includes such top stars as William Gargan, Reginald Owen, "Rags" Ragland, Una O'Connor, Elizabeth Raddox and Lumsden Hare among others.

Oscar Wilde's celebrated tale, modernized and streamlined, was adapted for the screen by Edwin Harvey Blum.

Under the knowing touch of Director Jules Dassin, "The Canterville Ghost" emerges as one of the warmest, most delicious fantasies we ever have seen. It has comedy same as at present.

Can't you feel the missing tightening up that line from the base of your throat to the tip of your chin?

WHILE a chiseled chin and firm, smooth throat are qualities of youth, they can be kept that way longer after the first blush of youth, as faded if you take proper precautions while time is still on your side, says lovely film star Linda Darnell.

Incidentally, she adds, if you have been careless and allowed a double chin to creep up on you, it may not be too late to correct this bight to beauty if you follow these two simple exercises for improving the profile:

First, keep your chin up, and twist your head from side to side as far around to the back as possible 20 times. Second, drop your head forward on your neck, open mouth wide and throw head back as far as possible, then slowly close your mouth. Repeat 10 times. Can't you feel the missing tightening up that line from the base of your throat to the tip of your chin?
