VITAMINERAL and MEALBLEND

have during the past four years become recognized among the best fox ranchers as being absolutely essential in producing foxes of quality and ranches full up in production of pups. Two factors which determine the years profits.

Why?

Because VITAMINERAL is a conditioner, keeping the animal full of vim, vigor and vitality; a guard against disease of all kinds, thus cutting down losses to a minimum; a mineral feed, thus balancing the ration which in turn helps the fox assimilate the rest of his ration to the extreme; a worm expeller, thus keeping parasitic infection down to a minimum; an appetiser, thus guarding against "off feed" and in turn run down condition.

Because MEALBLEND is an addition to the ordinary cereal ration which contains ingredients not found in any other commercial fox feed, and which are essential in regulating factors controlling growth, and reproduction; a blend of seven raw meals, which are fed without cooking, thus preserving all the vitamin potency for the fox; the only commercial fox feed on the market unaffected by heat, and which reaches the fox in a form similar to what he gets from the stomachs of wild animals he ordinarily devours.

BRINGING UP FATHER

—BY GEORGE MCMANUS

On Indian Trails

The third of a series of articles specially written for The Guardian By Lucy Gertrude Clarkin

Mr. W. H. Robinson, author of "Under Turquoise Skies" tells us how the "Yeibitsai" blanket design came into existence. I am indebted to this author for my knowledge of Navajo customs.

About fifteen years ago a Navajo woman decided to have something new in blanket designs, and she literally shook her fist in the face of the gods to be original. She used figures from the sacred sand painting of the medicine men and, to grasp the enormity of her offence, one must understand just what a sand painting means. They are used in a ceremony given to heal the sick, lasting for nine days, and must be destroyed at the close of the ceremony. They are made on the ground and are sometimes ten by twelve feet or larger. Dry, powdered colors are used to outline such things as mountains, skies, animals, birds, gods or plants. The design is usually conventional, and people who have seen them say that they are often very beautiful.

However, these designs, conceived, executed, and obliterated by medicine men, are held sacred, and when this "different" blanket was discovered hanging on the walls of the trader who had bought it there was another "Indian Rising." They insisted on having the blanket, even offered to buy it, but without success. Then they tried to steal it. No use; the trader knew he had something that would bring a high price; he was more interested in getting more of the same design than in averting calamity from the tribe. He offered a higher price for another of the same pattern and the weaver having escaped the anger of the gods, ventured on offending again and yet again. These rugs are now in the market. Other Navajo women, finding that nothing terrible had happened to the first weaver of the Yeibitsai, followed her lead.

Navajo blankets are priced from five to five hundred dollars. The price is determined by size, weave or design. Sometimes the finest of wool is used in the weaving demanding infinite patience and great skill; those are the high-priced blankets.

In most of the Trading Posts we find Navajo rugs of all sizes; so small sometimes, that they are used for making ladies underarm bags and, in larger sizes couch pillows.

No one thinks of using these blankets as we do our factory-made blankets or home-woven blankets, the weave is too stiff for that. They are better adapted to floor or couch covering.

Other Products

Things are woven by this tribe. Shirts and headbands are made on simpler looms and in a different manner. While the warp is hidden in the blanket weaving making them reversible, the wool is concealed in the smaller articles changing the colors on the back.

One seldom sees a Navajo without a blanket and they wear headbands nearly always. This bandeau is usually a bright color the brighter the better it would seem as red seems to be the prevailing shade. They have long hair (both sexes) and, as a general thing, tie it in a bun at the back of the head. The men wear the trousers and shirts of the white men, and the women wear very full and very long skirts; the women like colorful jackets, too, and plenty of jewelry. The men are fond of jewelry; I think they outdo their wives in gaudiness. They wear silver belt-slides and buttons, rings, bracelets and earrings.

Both sexes wear native-made moccasins. These are entirely different from our Indian-made moccasins. The snug-fitted, one-piece vamp is attached to a smooth sole;—something like an overshoe rubber,—and the upper is colored to the owner's taste. They extend well up on the leg aircraft operating in the west, but over the long sections of the Empire mail routes towards India and South Africa which lie in semi-tropical regions the "Eastern" type, with reduced passenger space and increased room for mails and freight, will fly.

Industrious Populace

There is little poverty among the Navajos. They are a home-loving, pastoral people owning large flocks of sheep and goats, besides thousands of horses. They derive a good income from their blankets and their silver-smiths make jewelry sales profitable.

Their women are quite modern in some respects. They often own the sheep and goats, and with the children's help, do the herding. If her "brave" gets to swagger too much, or otherwise disturb the "peaceful tenor of her days" the Navajo wife places his personal belongings,—probably a blanket and a saddle,—outside the Hogan door, and the gentleman, knowing what custom demands, goes elsewhere.

Like all romantic youngsters I had a great admiration for the "noble Red men." Their legends and poetry never failed to thrill me, and the matter-of-fact years hadn't quite disillusioned me; it remained for two braves and the Woolworth Company to give me a sane perspective of the race. It's a far call from war-whoops to perfume and that is exactly what those descendants of scalp-hunters were selecting when I had my first "close up" of the great American Indian.

Even such happenings do not rob them utterly of glamour. While they retain their ancient customs, their ceremonies and dances they remain picturesque and unusual.

All tribes have their dances, but the Apaches and Navajos, who are slow to accept christianity, observe these dances as religious rites and petitions to their gods.

Last week the Navajos in Gallup, N. M. held a dance ceremony for the curing of the sick in which were used the sand paintings that I described a while ago.

Where tribes are christianized their dances grow less savage and become celebrations rather than rites. Among the Pueblos, who are Catholics, the dances, after being censored, are used on Feast Days.

Almost every month there is a celebration in some Pueblo; they mean much in a social way to those people attracting as they do Indians from other villages and often white visitors.
