To The Electors Of Ward Five

Ladies and Gentlemen,

At the request of many electors of Ward Five I have consented to become a candidate for Councillor in the coming civic election.

If elected I will support every movement consistent with economy which has for its object the betterment of the city and in particular the health of its citizens.

I am in favor of supervised playgrounds for children and the conversion of Government Pond into an open air rink and I believe that these civic improvements could be effected with very little expense to the city.

The short time intervening between now and the election will not permit me to call upon all the electors of Ward Five and I take this opportunity of asking for your support in the coming contest.

Thanking you in anticipation, I am,

Respectfully yours.

JAMES E. BLANCHARD.

To the Civic Electors of Ward 5

Ladies and Gentlemen,

At the request of numerous electors of Ward 5, after due consideration, I have again consented to offer as a candidate for Councillor in the coming Civic Election.

Having been a member of the Civic Government the past two years, as chairman of the Light Committee and as one of the Finance Committee, my record is before you. If you consider that it is in the interest of the city and Ward 5 especially to elect me, be good enough to give me your hearty support.

I will support permanent Civic improvement with the understanding that strict economy be practised in every Civic department, so as to keep from my higher rate of taxation. I am also in favor of supporting any forward movement, the betterment and beautifying of our city, consistent with our revenues. The welfare of the city means our welfare.

It is imposible to make a complete house to house canvas and I cannot expect a personal interview with all the electors, I therefore take this medium to solicit your favorable support.

Thanking you in anticipation, I am,

Respectfully yours,

T. WILLIAM L. PROWSE

To the Electors of Ward Four

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The Civic Election is not far away and I take this opportunity to inform you that I will be a candidate for Councillor.

If elected I will do my utmost to provide good civic government and promote the city's progress. I believe in continuing permanent works if same can be accomplished without additional taxation. I also favor more play-grounds for the benefit of our children and a more rigid enforcement of our traffic laws.

To work economically and efficiently for the city and especially Ward Four shall be my constant care. Thanking you in anticipation of your support, I am

Faithfully yours,

E. A. FOSTER.

To The Electors Of Ward Four

Ladies and Gentlemen:

At the request of a number of the Electors of Ward 4 I have consented to be a candidate for Councillor at the Civic Election on February 13th. 1924.

Being a life long citizen of Charlottetown, and a property owner and being conversant with the business and civic requirements of our city, I will, if electedd, give my best efforts towards the protection of the public interests and the furtherance of good civic government—the carrying out of necessary public improvements, the protection of the property and person of our citizens and especially, children.

I am also in favor of having put into use resources now at the disposal of the city and not used, for the use, health and recreation of our children. In fact, I am in favour of any improvements consistent with reasonable taxation that will make Charlottetown a real place to live in.

Respectfully,

P. P. HENNESSEY.

...ACCIDENTS MAKE Zam-Buk A Daily Need

WHETHER it be a cut, a bruise or sprain, burn or scald, Zam-Buk provides the handiest, surest means to quick perfect healing.

It is from certain rare herbal extracts that Zam-Buk gets its power for subduing pain, soreness and inflammation, and its fine skin-growing property.

Be sure and keep a box of Zam-Buk on the handiest shelf, ready for every emergency.

MIGHT HAPPEN ANY DAY!

Mrs. A. Riseley, 416, St Timothy St., Montreal, writes:—"The kettle boiled over and badly scalded my hand. Though the skin blistered and peeled and pain was intense, yet the first dressing of Zam-Buk cooled and soothed in a surprising manner. A fine new skin speedily covered all the scalded surfaces as I continued with Zam-Buk."

ZAM-BUK Soothes, Purifies & Heals.

To the Electors of Ward Five

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I have again decided to offer as a candidate for Councillor in our Ward at the coming Civic Election.

As one of your representatives during the past two years I have endeavored to serve you to the best of my ability, giving my support to all measures which I considered for the betterment of our city.

I am in favor of permanent civic improvements, consistent with the revenue, and will support any movement that tends to build up and beautify our city, so long as it does not incur additional burden on the tax payers.

As I shall be unable to call upon you personally, I take this opportunity of soliciting your support on Election Day.

Respectfully yours,

GEORGE W. MacLEOD

NOTICE.

To the electors of the City of Charlottetown.

Ladies and Gentlemen:—

I intend to nominate as a candidate for Mayor at the civic election to be held this year on the 13th of February.

With a record of twelve years as your representative in different branches of the civic government; six years as City Councillor and six years as Commissioner of Sewers and Water Supply, I feel that I am justified in seeking, for a term, the highest civic office in the gift of the citizens.

Should you do me the honor of electing me I shall endeavor in the future, as I have done in the past, to respect the confidence placed in me and to give my support to a moderate policy of improvements in all civic Departments.

As it will be impossible for me to call upon every elector I take this opportunity of thanking you for the generous support you have given me in past elections and of soliciting your votes in the present campaign.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN McKENNA

CLAIRE'S LITTLE TRIUMPH

Chapter 100

The song seemed to be a contest between the three drums of the orchestra and the large brunette. There was a struggle lasting through three verses, each louder than the other, and they ended about even in a storm of applause. But the brunette out distanced the drums and finished triumphant in the encore. After which she retired smiling, the three drummers mopped their brows and comparative silence settled down over the restaurant.

In this comparative silence Maisie shrieked over to Claire for more particulars, Maisie's voice was never exactly low and pleasing, and she had to compete with several hundred voices that also were not exactly low and pleasing.

"But Clairie darlin'—you've kept it from us. We though you and Luther were parted for keeps. Why didn't you let us know everything was balmy again?"

The man sitting between them and one of the girls got up to dance, Maisie moved to Claire, where she did not have to talk so loud. Grange and Luther found they were in the same profession and were talking and laughing together.

"Oh," Claire said easily, "we thought we'd have a little honeymoon together—second honeymoon you know—and not let on."

"Is he—are you—have you been —?" Maisie wanted to be delicate, she also wanted information. Not knowing how to achieve both ends, she floundered about helplessly.

"Yes, we've been living at my flat," Claire helped her out sweetly. She was much cleverer than Maisie, who adored her, so she used Maisie to send out information to her friends.

How long had it been since Jim dropped from the crowd At least a month—she had to give the impression that the reconciliation was longer than that.

Luther would be sure to blunder into telling the truth, he never could lie decently, she remembered. Here he was talking suspension bridges and steel cables with Grange—

She slid her hand under his at the table, to attract his attention. Maisie was all eyes and ears—what fun she would have telling the girls this. She was the first to know.

"It's Luther's flat really," she went on. "We used to be there—I just kept it on while—well, while Loo went off to look after his mother and Amy. Oh, but we made it up long ago, didn't we Loo?" Her hand pressed his warningly. "Only Loo had to go away on a trip, and I couldn't leave the show—so we said nothing—we didn't want a lot of gossip."

Maisie leaned closer, lowering her voice to a whisper—a whisper which carried more clearly than ordinarily spoken words.

"That accounts for it," she said "I always said it was you who threw over Jim. I think it's grand of you to do that, for your husband. I always told the girls you and Luther were really in love—I'm so excited. Poor Jim, though—Claire, you might have let him down gently. Do you think he wants to make you jealous with that girl? She can't hold a candle to you for looks or style."

Claire hoped Luther had gone back to his discussion of cantilevers, air pressure, hydraulics and such things.

She glanced at Jim's table. It was empty—she turned to look at the dancers.

They were crowded together on the small floor, hot, uncomfortable stepped upon, each couple holding tightly together, not so much from affection as from necessity because there was no room for freedom, the whole compact mass swinging slowly, rhythmically to the music.

They were not separate individuals, nor separate couples, they were a mass, they were hot humanity, they were cross without knowing it and hot and tired without admitting it. They only thought they were having a good time because this sort of thing was taught them as the thing to do for pure enjoyment.

Only the slim, dark little girl in Jim's arms seemed cool and at ease. Clarke danced around the edge of the floor where the crowd was not so thick, skillfully steering his way among the couples, his arm not so much clasping the girl as holding the crowd away from her —

"He's dancing near the edge so's you can see him," Maisie's large whisper came again. "Trying to make you jealous, Claire. I wondered why he didn't bring his girl to our table. Now I know. He was just afraid you and your husband might come in and make him look like a dunce. I'm glad I phoned you."

Claire wanted to stop this. Luther might hear. She turned to him, her eyes asking to dance.

But the music stopped suddenly, Jim passed with a short nod to the table, the stranger's eyes gave them a brief, unconcerned glance.

A tough little girl dressed in Colonial costume, but with silk tights beneath the panniers instead of skirts, began to sing.

Tomorrow—The Dance.

Tell your druggist you want only the genuine "California Fig Syrup" which has directions for babies and children of all ages printed on bottle. Mother, you must say "California." Refuse any imitation.

ACTION STUFF

By Robert Welles Ritchie

No Indictment

His name was Greasy Baker, as I recall; that, at least was the only name he ever went by and—for all I know—he ever had. He had come over the Sierras in the Fifties by wagon train from Missouri and never even had gone as far as Sacramento. Just stuck there in the mountains diddling round as a prospector in the first years and later doing this and that job with a big lumber company.

A little runt of a man; back bowed like a turtle's shell; hands gnarled and knotty as a tamarack stump at snowline; a beard like that of the plaster gnomes, we used to see on German beer steins. He had lived so long in the big woods, had Greasy Baker, that he believed firmly in "ha'ants" and the unnamed bogies that dwelt in caves and the hollow stumps of the fallen sugar pines. Whispers unheard by other men dictated his way of life. Once he wore hip boots during the hottest week of July because the "ha'ants" had told him it was going to rain that week.

He rarely spoke to other men, either when about his work or during the noisy feeding time in the cook house. He lived alone in a cabin apart from the long bunk houses where we were hived—I was firing the engine of the log train that summer—and most of the wild ones in Deer Creek camp gave Greasy Baker a wide berth. They said he was looney, and I imagine they were right.

We had a foreman of the logging gang who was a devil. Ever and anon he would walk over the trail to Dutch Flat and get drunk on Chinese gin—a liquor which would corrode the hoops on the barrel which prisoned it. This cornishman feared neither man nor fiend. His name was Trefeathen—Charley Trefeathen.

One night very late Charley came into camp over the Dutch Flat trail. He was in that soft-spoken, veiled deviltry of drunkenness which is dangerous. He woke up my cabin mate and myself and commanded us to accompany him; he'd show us some fun. We went reluctantly; the man would have broken us in twain if he hadn't.

Charley first went to the cook house and rifled the pantry of several dozen sheets of sticky fly paper. We followed him up the hill to Greasy Baker's cabin. There he took off his shoes and; gently pushed open the door, disappeared in the darkness of the shack. My pal and I judged he was spreading fly paper on the floor beneath Baker's bunk.

After five minutes Charley backed out of the cabin, donned his brogans and then bid us hide with him in the nearby manzanita. We did so. Charley drew a revolver and fired three shots through the cabin wall.

A scream—a frightful turmoil inside the shack, and then Greasy Baker burst forth into the moonlight. He looked like an unabridged dictionary that had been hit by a locomotive. Flypaper stuck to him at every conceivable angle, from his beard to his socks. Aroused by the shots, the old man had leaped straight into the trap prepared for him and, in terror had rolled on the floor.

I remember that I did not stuff my mouth with leaves to smother laughter as did Charley the Cornishman. Perhaps because I had more imagination and could get some faint glimmering of what was in the old man's soul.

It became noised around the camp that Trefeathen had "sawed off a whizzer" on old Baker.

Ten days later swift tragedy visited Deep Canyon. Here was a gorge a full thousand feet deep, out of which they hoisted logs by a tramway car up the side of the mountain as steep as a church steeple. The bull-donkey hoisting machine, with its spool for the winding of the steel rope that dragged the log cars up the incline, stood dizzily on the brink above. A wire ran through staples on tree trunks up the george side to a gong on the bull-donkey. When all was ready below, the boss logger gave a pull on that signal wire.

Greasy Baker was at the throttle of the hoisting engine.

This day a carload of logs waited hoisting at the foot of the grade. The boss logger had driven in the iron spike connecting the hoisting cable with the load. Charley Trefeathen, who happened to be there, did not like the way it was done and clambered up the pyramid of logs with a maul to drive the spike deeper.

Though no signals was given, suddenly the steel rope snaking down from the midget engine high upon the brink tautened with the turn of the spool up there, and the end of the rope over which the big man bent whipped the spike from the log. It cut Charley the Cornishman clean in two.

No, there was no trial for murder. What could anyone prove against Greasy Baker?

Cause of Early Old Age

The celebrated Dr. Michenhoff, an authority on early old age, says that it is "caused by poisons generated in the intestine." When your stomach digests food properly it is absorbed without forming poisonous matter. Poisons bring on early old age and premature death. 15 to 30 drops of "Seigel's Syrup" after meals makes your digestion sound. 10
