ZORA The Invisible

By J. R. WILMOT CHAPTER I BY WHOSE HAND

Mr. Montgomery Gaynor, diamond merchant, sat in his luxuriously appointed office in Hatton Garden, a cameo of opulence. The Persian rug that covered the floor was an exquisitely cunning piece of work. He had brought it back with him from his last tour into the Orient.

His desk was of highly polished mahogany. It was set just a little to one side of the curtained window. Neatness and order were a fetish with him and the contents of his desk responded to the laws of method. He was a heavily built man with just a suggestion of obesity. His rufous face was mildly red and relieved by a close-cropped, iron-grey moustache. His age? Fifty-five to sixty would be a generous estimate, though his eyes had not lost the flash and the sparkle of youth.

A soft-footed clerk entered, noiselessly, and placing a sheaf of documents on the desk beside him, just as silently withdrew. Mr. Gaynor made no movement when the clerk entered. He often sat silent when he was planning the details of a complicated business transaction. No one in that office would have dared address his employer when stillness reigned in that detectable apartment. Mr. Gaynor did all the talking necessary. Others were paid to listen—and to obey. That was the secret of his success. That was one of the reasons why he was reputed to be one of the wealthiest diamond merchants in Europe. His name was known from Amsterdam to the Azores. When Montgomery Gaynor made a deal, the world market in precious stones quivered, stood still for a moment and then readjusted itself in conformity with his giant's planning and scheming.

He had spent most of his life scheming. He had realised, quite early in life, that he had to pit his intelligence against the best and, incidentally, the most crooked brains in the two hemispheres, and that life was a perpetual fight against an unknown adversary always on watch for a joint in his business armour.

Every successful business man must have enemies. He couldn't help it. The nature of the scheme of things ordained it so. That was how he figured things out and even when he had become a power—a name to be conjured with—he had not relaxed his code of business morals one iota, though he admitted that the fight always became easier when he had behind him a vast accumulation of wealth to be used as powder and shot as necessary demanded.

On this delightful April afternoon with the sun showering darts of light gold against the drab brick and stone of city offices, and flooding the rooms with amber light, Mr. Montgomery Gaynor continued to sit in his office chair before his desk gazing transfixedly at the buff-colored paper on the wall to the immediate right of the long window. He did not move.

If anyone had entered just then—as the silent footed clerk had done a few minutes before—they would have tip-toed softly from the room and whispered: "The Old Man's got another big idea. He's for all the world like a graven image. And they would not have been so very far astray in their assumptions. True, he was seated there like an image carved from flesh and bone, but he had been relieved from the necessity of thinking. For Mr. Montgomery Gaynor was dead.

CHAPTER II

It was the caretaker of the building that housed Mr. Montgomery Gaynor's office who made the discovery. He had been warned that the diamond merchant was still in his office when the clerks had locked their desks and reached for their hats on the stroke of half-past five.

It was no uncommon thing for Mr. Gaynor to remain in his room long after the others had gone home, and no one knew this better than William Bannister. He had never found the diamond merchant lacking in generosity. On this particular night the caretaker had seen the cleaners off the premises at nine o'clock, and noting that the door of "Montgomery Gaynor Limited" was still unlocked went out to partake of a little stimulant to a small tavern tucked unostentatiously away scarcely a stone's throw from the building.

At ten o'clock he returned suitably refreshed and, wonderfully revived with the company of his fellow men and something more than a nodding acquaintance with his glass. Mounting the stairs he tried the door of the outer office. It yielded to his touch and opened up on the darkness. That was the first shock. Switching on the light, he crossed to the door of Montgomery Gaynor's private office, and tapped lightly on the opaque glass panel. Receiving no reply, he turned the handle.

lived with the company of his fellow men and something more than a nodding acquaintance with his glass. Mounting the stairs he tried the door of the outer office. It yielded to his touch and opened up on the darkness. That was the first shock. Switching on the light, he crossed to the door of Montgomery Gaynor's private office, and tapped lightly on the opaque glass panel. Receiving no reply, he turned the handle.

The room was in darkness, and his hand went to the switch. In the subdued flood of yellow light from under a green shade, William Bannister gasped. At first he thought that Montgomery Gaynor had fallen asleep. He coughed, discreetly, but there was no response. Cautiously advancing towards the desk the caretaker experienced a peculiar sensation. It was as if something chilly chill was gripping his throat—an overpowering sensation of something evil.

Gaynor was staring fixedly at the wall in front of him. His steel grey eyes were wide open, and the color had not left his face. There was something about the man that had no resemblance to death, and yet, when he touched the body he found it rigid, like iron. It was then that Bannister's fear got the better of him and he fled from the room down the flight of stairs into the street, and hailed a constable at the corner. In less than five minutes a doctor and Scotland Yard had been communicated with.

The medical man arrived first. He examined the dead man carefully and looked up from his diagnosis with a puzzled frown. "I should say he has been dead for five or six hours, though how he came by his death I don't know. There is something here that needs closer investigation. It is the most singular case of death I have ever seen."

Inspector Charles Webster, of the Special Branch of Scotland Yard, heard the caretaker's story and listened quietly. He had also met Dr. Briscoe on several occasions and knew him to be a thoroughly reliable medical man. In view of this he decided to believe what the doctor had told him, and to await developments, for Webster was not one of those men who see any sense in setting out on a wild goose chase over London in search of as yet a hypothetical murderer. Investigation proved that nothing in the office had been tampered with.

"Don't move the body or disturb anything at all," he commanded the constable as he reached for the desk telephone and asked for a number. "Hello! Is Mr. Blayne in?" he inquired. "Ask him to come to the phone for a moment, will you?" "Hello! Is that you, Peter? Webster speaking. Can you come round to Zenith Buildings, Hatton Garden? I've got something I'd like you to see. . . . Good!"

He replaced the receiver slowly and turned to the doctor. "I don't see any reason why you should be kept from your bed any longer doctor," he intimated generally. "You're quite satisfied he's been dead for at least five hours, aren't you?" "Certainly!" the medical man agreed. "You'll let me know first thing in the morning about the autopsy, won't you?" "Sure," said Webster, as he grasped the doctor's hand. "Good night!" (To Be Continued)

HAD VALUABLE ANTIQUES

HAMILTON, Oct. 11.—(By The Canadian Press)—Two egg cups, one having a picture on it of the Scott monument at Edinburgh, and the other of John Knox's house, Edinburgh, and an old fashioned thimble case, all made of lovely boxwood grown on and near the "Abbotsford," the seat of Sir Walter Scott, are in the possession of Mr. Fred G. White, of this city. They came from the old home of his grandmother at Berwick-on-Tweed. His grandmother came to Berwick about 1850 and the family has lived here ever since.

New Glasgow

The North West Queens district Sunday School Convention was held in the New Glasgow United Church on Tuesday afternoon and evening, Oct 4th, with a large attendance. At the afternoon meeting Rev. W. G. Quigley occupied the pulpit and carried out the devotional period. Reports were heard from the representatives of the different Sunday Schools. In the absence of the President and Secretary, Mrs. Boothroyd acted as President and Miss Annie Lowther as Secretary. Rev. A. Gibson gave an interesting talk on the devotional part of the Sunday School work and the importance of worship in connection with the study. He stressed the importance of having a theme of worship. Fifteen minutes of a worship period and 1-2 hour Bible study. At the evening meeting Rev. W. Patterson occupied the pulpit and carried out the devotional service after which the minutes of the afternoon meeting were read by the Secretary and approved. Rev. Wm. Patterson was elected President for the ensuing year and Mrs. Boothroyd re-elected as Secretary. Rev. A. Gibson gave another talk on the work which was very instructive, asking for the cooperation of the Church people and parents, impressing on their minds the important part it plays for the young people in the different churches. Rev. W. Patterson then spoke a few words of appreciation regarding the address which had been given by Mr. Gibson and granted a wish that a Teachers Training Class be organized in New Glasgow and Cavendish. The meeting closed by singing. Sing them over again to me, wonderful words of life.

Well Known Business Man Passes Away

(Canadian Press) EDMUNDSTON, N. B., Oct. 10.—Victim of a sudden heart attack, Archibald Fraser, Edmundston, President of Fraser Companies Ltd. and director of the Royal Bank of Canada and other financial organizations, dropped dead at his hunting lodge at Nictau on the Tobique River in Victoria County at one p.m. today. Mr. and Mrs. Fraser had left their home in Edmundston to spend the Thanksgiving holiday at their hunting lodge which is about 30 miles from Plasterrock. Mr. Fraser had been in good health and spirits and had anticipated his holiday with much pleasure. While in the woods, four miles from his lodge at one p.m. today he shot a bird, took two steps toward the fallen creature and dropped dead before the eyes of his nephew, Mac Fraser and a guide, John Clark. They hurriedly placed the body in the canoe and paddled the four miles down river to the camp. Mr. Fraser is survived by his wife, formerly Miss Evelyn Whyte of Edinburgh, Scotland, formerly stenographer with the legal firm at Fredericton, N. B., of Hanson and Dougherty (R. B. Hanson, K. C., M. P. for York-Sunbury and C. L. Dougherty). They were married on June 25, 1930, in London, England, returning to New Brunswick in July, 1930, after a honeymoon in Paris, and taking up residence at Edmundston.

Liberal Leader Moves Partisan Amendments

(Canadian Press) OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 10.—Rt. Hon. MacKenzie King, Liberal leader, climaxed an attack on the Government in the House of Commons today by moving an amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the Throne. The amendment reads: "Whilst reserving any expression of view upon the merits of the agreements concluded at the recent Imperial Economic Conference the House is of the opinion that the tariff policies of the present administration have seriously injured the trade of Canada and have intensified the economic depression and that the Government has wholly failed to afford a remedy for unemployment and agricultural distress as pledged by the Prime Minister." The House regrets that except the dole, the Government has no policy with respect to the relief of unemployment. It also deplores the Government's obvious endeavors by postponing the revision of the Bank Act to avoid immediate consideration by Parliament of the all-important subjects of banking, credits and currency.

Sir James Irvine Visits Dominion

(Special to the Guardian) MONTREAL, Oct. 10.—One of Great Britain's leading educationists, Sir James Irvine, principal and vice-chancellor of St. Andrews University, is coming to Canada on the Canadian Pacific liner, Duchess of Richmond, now en route from Liverpool to Montreal. Sir James Irvine was educated at Allan Glen's School and Glasgow Royal Technical College, is a graduate of St. Andrew's, Glasgow and Leipzig, and holds many honorary degrees.

EXTRA ATTRACTIONS FOR EXHIBITION

World Championship Wrestling Match and Horse Races Nova Scotians will have a chance to see the heavyweight wrestling champion of the world defend his title when Henri DeGane is faced by his most dangerous contender, Charlie Stack.

The bout is an added attraction to the Eastern Canada Exhibition, bringing it to a whirlwind wind up on the last day. More good news for all those who can't think of an Exhibition without horse racing is the fact that arrangements have been completed to stage two days of speedy track events on Tuesday and Thursday during the Exhibition. When it was first planned not to hold horse races other features were arranged for. Now the visitor will get the benefit of these added attractions, plus everything else on the program. Recent months have proved that wrestling interest has risen to fever heat in Nova Scotia, patrons finding pugilism entirely too tame in comparison. It can be taken for granted that deGane, conqueror of

Drink 100% FULL-FLAVOURED COFFEE

BEFORE buying your next package of coffee know this—Is there air inside that tin or package, or can any get in? If so—coffee deteriorates, loses flavour. If not—coffee keeps its full flavour indefinitely. Every Bit of Oxygen Is Banished by the Vita-Fresh Process. This process, exclusive to Maxwell House Coffee, positively removes and excludes all traces of oxygen from the sealed tin. In Maxwell House you get not only a quality which has made this old Southern blend world-famous, but this quality is completely protected. No coffee can be smoother, richer, more satisfying. Get a tin from your grocer today. See that the words "Vita-Fresh" are marked on the sealed and locked tin. "GOOD TO THE LAST DROP"

It's the Air Inside the Tin or Package That Ruins Coffee Flavour. Loose or bag coffee loses 65% of its flavour in 9 days after roasting. Coffee in old-fashioned tins or cardboard cartons loses 45% of its flavour in 9 days after roasting.

Latest British Census Figures

Married life is becoming more popular in England. There are more young married couples today than there were ten years ago, and the proportion of bachelors and spinsters is rapidly decreasing. The facts are among many disclosed in the census volumes that are now emerging from the British Government's printing presses. At the same time the average age of the population has increased by about two years. The average age of the Englishwoman today is just under thirty-three and of the Englishman a fraction over thirty one. That is accounted for by the fact that women live longer than men.

There IS Relief from RHEUMATISM

In this day, no man or woman need suffer with rheumatic pain. It's as easy to get rid of as a headache. Aspirin disposes of such pain like magic. Two tablets with a swallow of water relieves any mild attack. If any pain is left, repeat every two hours until the last twinge is driven from the system. Never hesitate to take Aspirin. It is not a narcotic. It won't upset the stomach. It can't depress the heart. It may be taken days at a time, without the slightest harm. So, don't dread the winter because of rheumatism, neuritis, lumbago or constant colds. Aspirin will give you complete relief.

Towns of Children

Essex and Middlesex show interesting contrasts. Essex has a larger juvenile population than Middlesex, 26 per cent of the inhabitants being under 16, as compared with 23 per cent in the latter county. Dagenham is not only one of the youngest towns in England but has also the most juvenile population. No less than 45 per cent of its dwellers are boys and girls under sixteen and more than half its population—45,000 out of a total of 89,000—is under 20 years of age. It has also a very evenly balanced population, the males and females being almost numerically equal, with the males in a very slight majority. Iford, on the other hand, has 10,000 more males than females, Southend 15,500 more and Leyton and Walthamstow each 6,000 more. Middlesex has a larger proportion of females than Essex, especially young girls. In Tottenham there are 20,000 and in Hendon 15,000 females too young to marry. These figures are equivalent to about half the number of single women in these towns. The largest group of married couples is that between the ages of 30-40.
