MILDRED BARBOUR

CHAPTER 61
THE GIVE-AWAY

"Well," remarked May Varney, impatiently tapping the arm of her chair, "this is the first time I ever knew the Wares to be late for a party!"

Three times the country club steward had approached to ask whether dinner might be served to the Varneys' party and three times he had been told that the party was not yet complete.

"Probably a little trouble with the car," suggested some one easily.

"With a Rex-nonsense!" scoffed Varney. "Besides, Herbert isn't the sort who lets any car get into such condition that it will break down."

"Well, he isn't infallible," said another. "And even Herbert Ware might be run into by a careless driver."

"Oh, it's probably Lila's fault," contributed still another guest cheerfully. "She hung her own wedding up fifteen minutes."

"But it was her last tardiness!" laughed May Varney. "Herbert's seen to that!"

"Gosh, I'd hate to be Lila and live by a time-clock!" muttered some one fervently.

There were several amused echoes of that sentiment, and then Varney said, with a rather knowing glance at his own wife:

"What'll you bet a domestic rupture is the cause of the delay?"

"With the Wares hardly more than honeymooners? Never!" was the scandalized verdict that met his suggestion.

But Mary Varney had flushed and was biting her lips. The glance she flung her husband was far from affectionate.

After another ten minutes, she announced:

"We'll have to go in, anyway. If we wait any longer for the Wares, the dinner will be ruined."

But just as the guests were entering the dining-room, Herbert and Lila arrived. It was obvious to every one that they had had a quarrel. Herbert was white and stern; Lila was flushed, and her eyes showed signs of recent tears.

"So sorry to be late," she whispered hurriedly to Mrs. Varney, "but—"

"Don't bother with excuses," said

MOTHER OF TWINS HELPED

Restored to Health by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mitchell, Ont.—"I had little twin babies and for quite a while after I was unable to get up and do my work because of pains all the way up my legs at the back. I also had headaches and got very little sleep. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and soon I was able to get up and do my work. I have taken three bottles and I am fine, do my work without trouble and am gaining in weight and strength. I will gladly recommend the Vegetable Compound to anyone."

IN THE PROBATE COURT

19th George V., A. D., 1928
In Re-Estate of Rebecca Brown, late of York, in Queen's County, in the said Province, deceased, testate

By the Honourable A. Bannerman Warburton, Surrogate, Judge of Probate, &c., &c.

To the Sheriff of the County of Queen's County, or any Constable or literate person within said County.

GREETING:

WHEREAS upon reading the petition on file of Hamilton H. Brown and Abner Vessey, both of York aforesaid, the Executors of the above named Estate praying that a Citation may be issued for the purpose hereafter set forth: You are therefore hereby required to cite all persons interested in the said Estate to be and appear before me at a Probate Court to be held in the Court House in Charlottetown, in Queen's County, in the said Province on Wednesday the twenty-sixth day of September next, coming, at the hour of eleven o'clock, forenoon, of the same day to show cause if any they can why the accounts of the said Estate should not be passed and the Estate closed as prayed for in said petition and on Motion of Donald McKinnon Proctor for the said Petitioner. And I do hereby order that a true copy hereof be forthwith published in some newspaper published in Charlottetown aforesaid, once in each week for at least four consecutive weeks from the date hereof and that a true copy be forthwith posted in the following public places respectively, namely in the hall of the Court House in Charlottetown aforesaid, in front of the Hall in York aforesaid, and at or near Peter Brodie's gate at York aforesaid so that all persons interested in the said Estate as aforesaid may have due notice thereof.

Given under my Hand and the Seal of the said Court, this 21st day of August, A. D., 1928, in the 19th year of His Majesty's reign.

(Sgd.) A. B. WARBURTON,
Judge of Probate.

May dryly. "Do you want time to powder your nose?"

Lila shook her head.

"It wouldn't do any good. I know my eyes are a sight."

"Herbert been acting up?" asked May lightly.

"No. I have," confessed Lila meekly.

"Well, take my advice and don't admit it. Nothing ruins a well-disciplined husband so quickly. Remember this, Lila—a husband is always in the wrong. Always. There's no exception to the rule."

The party trailed into dinner then, and Lila found herself seated opposite Herbert, with a negligible parcel on either side. She was uncomfortably aware that she was the object of his frowning glances even when he was giving his attention to the chatty little widow who was his own dinner partner. Or rather, her unadorned fingers and wrists were the objects of his black looks.

After awhile, she was aware that the talk around the table had become general and had turned to the subject of bridge. It was a painful subject for her, at that moment, and one she infinitely preferred to avoid.

The discussion seemed to center around the question of how the party was to be divided after dinner; which guests were to do and which to play bridge. The efforts of the hostess to divide the sheep from the goats proved futile. Everybody, with three or four exceptions, voted for bridge.

"But I haven't ordered enough tables for everybody," wailed May, "and the Channings and the Devereauxs will be furious: I promised them we'd split for the dancing, because they haven't enough men. Now do, some of you lazy bridge fiends, act like martyrs and help me out."

With that, the party en masse voted for dancing, and May was left with six empty tables. In mock despair, she marshalled her guests—so many for bridge; so many for dancing. She called the role like a school m'am. When she reached Lila, she said:

"Lila will play, of course, and Herbert—I think you'd better go and dance with one of the Devereaux girls."

Herbert spoke up crisply: "I think we'll arrange it the other way around, if you'll permit. Lila shall dance and I'll play."

"But Lila adores playing," protested May.

"I prefer that she doesn't play tonight," said Herbert decisively.

Lila's face was becoming flushed, but her hands were growing chilly. May Varney said:

"Nonsense! I want Lila to be my partner. I need some money, and I can't lose with Lila. She's a crack player—the only girl in our club who hasn't lost a penny this year."

"Hurrah! cried several persons in chorus. "Let's draw cuts for partnering with Lila!"

But Lila didn't hear. Her frightened gaze had met Herbert's. She was remembering the drive out from town; hearing herself say haughtily: "If you must know what has become of my jewels, Herbert—I've pawned them—to pay my bridge debt!"

She waited now for the blow to fall. It didn't. But, of course, it would, as soon as they were alone.

The party was over, and Herbert and Lila were in the car again for the return journey. And still Herbert said nothing. They were at home—and Herbert said good night very pleasantly and went to his own room.

Lila sat in front of her dressing-table, staring at her reflection, too startled to begin to disrobe.

Herbert's silence frightened her much more than his anger.

She would have been a great deal more frightened, if, on the following morning, she could have looked into his private office and seen him send his secretary away before he unhooked the receiver of his telephone and gave a number.

The number he called was that of a detective.
