Men, Men! Try It To-night—Feel Fine Tomorrow

Simple Way to Get "Pep," To Be Put Right On Your Feet.

When a man has lost ambition to "dig in" and stay at things—when he complains of headache, fulness in the right side, pains in the shoulder blade—it's purely a case of "Liver."

These symptoms invariably indicate a clogged, inactive liver. The body can't get rid of its wastes, and the whole system is half paralyzed.

Dr. Hamilton's Pills stimulate the liver into activity in one night. Being a mild vegetable laxative they produce results in a few hours. The bilious headache and constipation are removed, spirits rise, complexion clears, animation returns. Nothing in the calendar so efficient for that tired, lazy feeling as Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Very mild, don't interfere with work, invariably do lots of good. Order today, 25c per box, five for $1.00, all dealers, or The Catarthzone Co., Montreal.

"These Women"
BY MALCOLM DUART

CHAPTER LIII

"I wonder how Mr. Parrish found out that Audrey was ill?" inquired Nona.

"From my New York office, I suppose," said Morton, taking back the telegram.

"Poor boy," said Nona. "He's lost to the world, too! All of us, Parrish, and Audrey and me!"

Morton had not let go of her hand, and now he led her back to her chair. "You said almost exactly what Audrey said, when she talked a little while," he told her, sadly. "All of us are lost in the world, groping our way."

"But you are not lost," she protested. "You have everything—friends, and money, and position, and people who love you."

A vase of flowers was on a small stand beside him, and he turned to touch the blooms. He rearranged them, with deliberate movements, keeping his back toward Nona. At last he said: "I'm more lost than any of you."

She plucked at his sleeve, tugging it until he faced her again.

"You're sad now, Parrish, because of Audrey. But before that you were always gay. You laughed, and danced, and sang and played pranks like a boy!" Her dark eyes were wet, but she smiled a little, tremulously.

"There was a play one time, about a clown who was dying of heartbreak, while the crowds roared at his antics." He pulled from her belt the still clinging to his coat. "I'll telegraph Parrish to come ahead," he said, abruptly.

Her hand fell, and he crossed to the telephone. Calling his office, he dictated a brief message to Parrish in New York.

"Audrey mentioned his name," he told Nona, as he set the instrument down.

"Is she beginning to like him—to fall in love with him?" Nona asked.

He reflected. "The doctor said she is reaching out for something to cling to," he answered. "Maybe it will be a good thing if she comes."

"If she likes him, and is in love with you, I feel sorry for her," Nona said, arising. "Your personal life should not tear herself away from you. Shall we go up to Audrey's room?"

He led her up the stairs, and into the sick chamber. Audrey lay, still and peaceful, breathing gently. Her hair had been brushed by the nurse, and covered with a net to keep it in order. Her cheek lay upon one arm; the other arm was flung backward, her hand resting with palm exposed upon the coverlet.

"She looks like a sleeping angel," Nona whispered.

"You needn't whisper," the nurse said. "Noises do not seem to arouse her."

Nona touched the soft cheek, across which lay the upper edge of a silken cover.

Audrey's hand closed, and it reopened. Her head shifted, a little lower.

"Daddy—Mr. Parrish," she said, almost inaudibly.

Nona and Morton looked at one another, and then down at Audrey again.

Nona beckoned for Morton to follow her into the hall.

"She is wondering which of you she cares for the most!" Nona whispered, so the nurse would not hear.

"Harry!"

He waited for her to go on. "I hope she chooses Mr. Parrish! I want you—I want you for myself!"

She ran down the stairs, and in a moment Morton heard the outer door close behind her.

Audrey awakened again a little after one o'clock the following morning. Following Morton's instructions, the night nurse aroused him in slippers and robe, he went into the room and found Audrey placidly viewing a spray of flowers that the nurse had laid beside her on the bed. She turned her head toward Morton for his kiss, and smiled at him.

"Aren't these lovely flowers?" she said. "His voice had a little more vigor than the day before, and the pauses between the words were not so long. 'You brought them?'"

"Nona sent them," he told her. She smiled again, and caressed the dewy petals. "She's good, and sweet, and kind!"

He sat down, and held her hand. This time, he did not talk to her except when she spoke. She asked if he had news of Nona's further success on the stage, and he told her what he knew.

"She has spent almost all the time here she could, you know," he said.

"She shook her head. 'I must have slept all day yesterday and all tonight,' she said.

"He caught the nurse's significant glance, and forebore telling how long she had been unconscious of the world.

"For a long time she lay, dreamily fingering her flowers, and looking about the familiar room. 'It almost seems as if I have been away from here for years,' she said, her voice drowsy. 'The walls and pictures all look so strange.'"

She closed her eyes. After a time, Morton withdrew his hand from hers, and softly stole from the room.

He was eating breakfast when John Parrish arrived. The young man had come direct from the train, and he dropped his suitcase in the hall, as he advanced with one hand outstretched to Morton.

"How is she?" He spoke as if he were afraid to receive the answer.

The butler took his hat, and Morton led him into the breakfast room.
