Gov.-General And Princess Alice Busy

OTTAWA, Aug. 12—(CP)—Two of the busiest people in Canada these days are the Governor-General and Princess Alice.

Strangers in the Dominion, they have their hands full in getting to know Canada and its people, but in addition to normal duties they have taken on the job of encouraging and stimulating the country's war effort in every way possible.

Since he was sworn in at Ottawa, the Earl of Athlone, usually attired in the uniform of a British major-general, has visited, among other things, the headquarters of the three armed forces, the national research council, and several local factories engaged in war work.

He officially opened No. 2 service flying training school at nearby uplands airport, inspected various military units, and last week journeyed to Petawawa, Ont., to observe military operations there. He has addressed several clubs in Ottawa, and attended many benefits.

Princess Alice spends much time away from Rideau Hall also. She was guest of honor at a ceremony at Rockcliffe Air Station, where she received a $100,000 Bollingbroke Bomber donated by the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire.

She often accompanies the Governor-General on his visits, and has herself a number of things to attend to, such as visits to hospitals, Red Cross headquarters, and Girl Guide camps. She travelled to Petawawa with the Earl of Athlone and opened a hostess house at Pembroke, Ont., on the way.

Throughout the parliamentary session two mornings a week were set aside by the Earl of Athlone to receive members of parliament and talk over conditions in the various constituencies.

The engagement book listing the vice-regal activities includes this week a visit to Camp Borden. Soon they will start their fall tour of some of the principal cities engaged in war work in Eastern Canada.

Canadians Carry On "Improvise" Cheerfully

CANADIAN FIELD HEADQUARTERS, Somewhere in England, is trained to move fast and hit hard, the First Canadian Division is learning to do without some of the cumbersome camp equipment that would impede its striking power in the event of a German invasion.

"Improvise" is the keyword of the Canadians. When away from billets and the proper equipment is not readily available, the men soon find a natural substitute.

This is no hardship to soldiers with experience of hunting, fishing or tramping in the Canadian woods. In fact, they much prefer the wild beauty of a camp in the woods to the bleakness of army barracks.

Some of the bivouacs are crude affairs... just a roof of boughs propped up on short poles. Others are more elaborate with a framework of sawed wood, with cedar branches and ferns. A few of the men have even built themselves small log huts.

One New Brunswick regiment has solved the long-standing problem of what to do with old razor blades. They are dropped into a convenient knothole of a tree.

Beds have been built out of saplings rough hewn and have been made from small trees.

But there's nothing primitive about the cookery equipment. These soldiers don't have to waste their time collecting kindling and then rubbing two sticks together to light a fire. All the cooking is done with a sort of blowtorch, using gasoline as fuel. This type of stove also has the advantage of not betraying the position of the troops by any telltale wisp of smoke.

There are fireless cookers for stews, big thermos bottles for tea and coffee and all sorts of other ingenious gadgets to ensure that the men get well cooked food.

Napoleon said that an army marches on its stomach. But with these Canadian soldiers it isn't a march, it's a mechanized advance.

Not is there anything primitive about the medical and dental equipment which guards the health of the troops.

Camouflaged trucks, hard to spot amid the sun-flecked foliage, turn out to be small mobile hospitals, with a large assortment of bottles, bandages and instruments.

The mobile dental units are equipped with special chairs and drills. So that they will not be dependent on the electricity supply, these drills are operated by a treadle on such the same principle as the old-time sewing machine.

Even amid the primitive, the murmuring pines and the hemlocks, the dental unit of a Saskatchewan regiment preserves the authentic atmosphere of regular dentists' offices... there's even a tableful of out-of-date magazines in the waiting room.

Immigration And Population Figures

OTTAWA, Aug. 12—(CP)—Canada counted 4,600 new citizens during the first six months of 1940 compared with 9,193 during the corresponding period of 1939. The decrease of 50 per cent was attributable in a large measure to the war.

Figures released Saturday by the Immigration branch of the Department of Mines and Resources showed that of the total immigrants to come to Canada from Jan. 1 to June 30, only 744 came from other countries outside of the United States and the United Kingdom compared with 4,931 in 1939.

Total immigration to Canada from the United States amounted to 2,707 compared with 2,529 in 1939, and from the United Kingdom 1,183 compared with 1,742. Returned Canadians from the United States totalled 2,011 compared with 2,141.

AWAKENED WOMAN

stairs to find him. Suppose he had gone home! She discovered him, however, in the kitchen cutting and finishing his dinner, while Roxie, still not quite friendly, watched him closely.

She returned to the living-room to wait for dinner, and there found on the table another pile of letters with a telegram on top of them.

"Please mail brown envelope left on my desk to me hotel Blackstone love Nell."

But where was Nell's desk? wondered Joyce, puzzled. She glanced vaguely about the big room but she knew already there was nothing so workmanlike as a desk in it.

When she had finished her dinner she remembered Nell's telegram. She had better find the papers and mail them immediately. There must be a study or "den" somewhere in the house. Perhaps Fen called it a "library." Where would it be? A little reflection suggested to her that the natural location was probably beyond Nell's dressing room, in the wing opposite her own boudoir. She did not remember a second door in the dressing room but when she went up to it, she found that there was one, just at the foot of the narrow bed, in the wall opposite the bathroom door.

She pushed on the electric button inside the room which had opened the door, and a shaded desk lamp sprang into light. Exactly in the middle of this luminous circle lay the object of her search, a little brown envelope. "Well, that was easy," thought Joyce, relieved. She crossed the floor, looking about the room with interest. What had his study reveal of the character of Nell Packard—of her husband?

Joyce sat down at the desk to examine a photograph which she found more carefully. The picture, which showed a man and a pretty girl, was obviously an enlargement of a small snap. The girl was perched upon a shelf of rock, while the man stood close beside her. His right arm was around her waist, her left hand curled about his neck. Both were smiling broadly, and the girl's right hand waved an impudent greeting.

"Do I look that way when I smile?" wondered Joyce, looking at self-confident and saucy? She stared at the picture. "Nell has a nice smile. There's something about it that's quieter and more sincere than Fen's grin."

There was a short row of books standing on the desk top, held in place by two heavy bronze bears. The books, which she found stationary and leaflets inscribed "Packed Fruit Packing Co., Inc., Manzanita, Cal." So that was Nell's business.

She could find no pen with which to address the brown envelope, and decided to take it to her own room to prepare for it. But when she left the desk, however, she discovered something which set her heart thumping with mingled pain and pleasure. In one of the drawers which she had opened to look for a pen, she found a few loose snapshots.

The picture Joyce lingered over. It was Nell sitting beside a sweet-faced elderly woman against a background of roses. That was undoubtedly his mother. She was about Mrs. Packard were living, and if so, what she thought of Fen.

raised the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders and the Fort Garry Horse as 2nd division units and started recruiting 3rd and 4th division battalions.

In Regina recruiting also is in full swing for the Regina Rifle Regiment and other branches of the services. From Saskatoon, the Saskatchewan Light Infantry went overseas with the 1st division and large numbers of men from all over north Saskatchewan have been and are being recruited.

Send Men To Sea

The Edmonton Regiment represented northern Alberta in the 1st division. Other troops are in summer training or have gone overseas. In the Calgary area 16 Alberta units were mobilized at the outbreak of war.

Far from the sea, prairie men are training for naval duty, Winnipeg having contributed more than 500 from the Royal Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve for active service. Edmonton and the Lakehead also sent a good number of reserve men to the coasts.

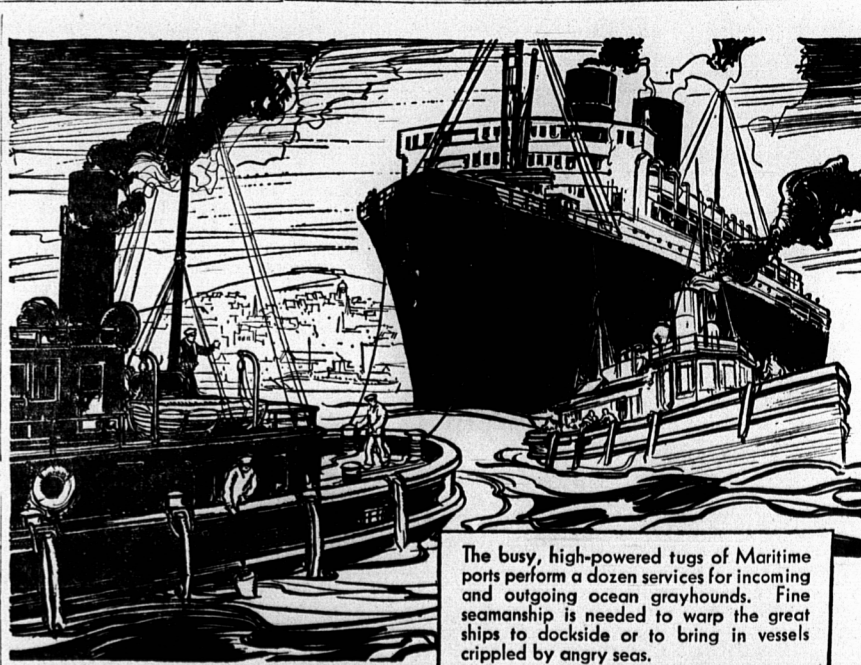

At Fort William branches of the No. 2 elementary flying school were rushed to completion and the school is in operation. At Brandon an air force manning pool provides for 1,700 recruits prior to their assignment to a school. Work on a Service Training School at Saskatoon is progressing at a cost of $1,000,000. Originally scheduled to open in October, the elementary flying training school at Prince Albert opened in July.

Extension of air facilities in Regina cost upwards of $150,000. Buildings and hangars cost more than $250,000 and by September the training of observers will be underway.

Calgary will have a service flying training school, a wireless school and an equipment depot. Fields are being enlarged and new ones built. Other fields are at Meleod, Lethbridge and Medicine Hat.

Airplanes and naval vessels for the fighting forces are being constructed in Lakehead factories. Elsewhere, aside from manufacture of military clothing in urban centres, greatest wartime industrial upturn is in the packing business, providing food for the troops.

Six plants are being prepared in Winnipeg for manufacture of munitions and small arms parts. "Somewhere in Western Canada" the government is sponsoring wartime chemical plants and other Winnipeg facilities are engaged in manufacture of army purpose supplies such as mattresses and
