OBITUARY.

Entered into rest, on Wednesday morning, July 13th, 1910, at her home at North Rustico, after a painful illness of four months, Eliza Helen, beloved wife of Frederick W. Woolner, in the sixty-seventh year of her age. Deceased was the daughter of the late Wm. S. MacNeill and leaves to mourn, besides an aged mother, a sorrowing husband, two sons, Chester of Thomasson, Cal. (who visited his mother during her illness), and Benjamin of North Rustico, and two daughters, Mrs. Hammond Tombs of Rustico and Miss Isabel at home, also three brothers, loved by her family and friends, her sweet, cheerful disposition and kindly manner endeared her to all. She will be much missed, for who in the heart and home who can fill a mother's place? Since she went home, The robin's note has touched a minor strain, The old, glad songs breathe but a sad refrain, And laughter sobs, with hidden, bitter pain. Since she went home, How still the empty rooms her presence blessed, Untouched the pillows that her dear head pressed, Our lonely hearts have nowhere for their rest. Since she went home, But their loss is her eternal gain, Her life on earth was one of loving ministry and service to those in death was indeed to her simply "going home"—only the beginning of a life more abundant. The funeral service was conducted by her pastor, Rev. John Stirling, who spoke very feelingly from Luke VII-Chap. 13th verse—"And when the Lord saw her He had compassion on her and said unto her, 'Be comforted, thy sins are forgiven.'"

THE WORK OF DETECTIVES.

As head of Scotland Yard's criminal investigation department for many years, Sir Robert Anderson came into touch with all sorts of wrong doing and was at the unraveling of every kind of plot which can be hatched in the prodigious brain of the expert modern rogue. In Blackwood's Magazine of London he gives some instances of the lighter kinds of crime, especially dealing with the thief, both in large and small way of business, his methods and the best stratagems for frustrating them. He describes some artifices of the advertising trickster, the men who supply the credulous with enlargements of photographs for nothing, and give timekeepers as free newspaper men harbor the delusion that they can detect bad poetry at a distance of five miles and three or four paragraphs. However, notwithstanding the conspiracy of the newspapers to discourage real genius, the poets kept right on, and every few weeks some one of them contrives, in spite of all handicaps, to get into print some song that fires the nation. Generally it requires some moving and inspiring occasion to cause the erstwhile mute in-glorious Millions to fire off a real poetical salvo; and so it was the other day in Ontario when a well known man got drowned and the local poet produced the following, which was printed in the Wallaceburg Herald-Record:

He wasn't in the water long When something about him went wrong; ... Something bothered in his head, Soon he sunk to the bottom, sun-stroked, dead.

He sank and soon the bubbles rose, Something happened, no one knows, For he never came to the top, And after him the divers had to drop.

Talk about poetic license! There you have it. See how the poetic fire adorns facts that seem almost commonplace! This drowned man sank to the bottom—as is not uncommon in such cases—but when the poet adds that he was "sun-stroked," he gives the drab incident that touch of embroidery which distinguishes real poetry from a verdict by the coroner's jury. If it were not for such a adornment, one is not quite sure that he would not prefer the literary form of such a verdict to the poetry of Wallaceburg, but the people of that community must be permitted to judge themselves.

The editor of the Wallaceburg Herald-Record has done the cause of literature no inconsiderable service by showing the courage necessary to print the poet's poetry just as he wrote it,—and no doubt the awful example will be remembered for some years to come. Meantime, the Wallaceburg editor probably sighs for the increase of that far off time or country:

"Where the Ruydards cease from Kipling, And the Haggards ride no more."

THAT LITERARY FEELING.

(St. John Telegraph.) Every little while some male or female person either the congested cities or in the daisy-decked rural regions, rises up in the morning and hears a loud clear call to become a poet. It must be a most joyful sensation, that absolute conviction that one is full to the lips of unspoken thoughts for which the world has long been waiting. It seems always to be accompanied by a profound belief that the poets of the past have fallen down on the job, and that there is nothing to do but hurl a few real verses into the arena and modestly accept the plaudits of a worshipping world.

The world is filled with poets, and near-poets, and the shameful thing is that the newspapers try to discourage them; while everyone knows that no newspaper man has the slightest idea of what constitutes good poetry, though, to be sure, most
