RICHARD'S RETURN

Wednesday morning!
"Tomorrow Richard comes."
Yvonne stared at the ceiling. This very day she must make her choice. She had refused to discuss her plans with any one. She did not know herself whether Richard would return to an empty home, a famous wife, or to Yvonne, the French peasant girl, her life bounded by the four walls of this house.

She rose and dressed hastily. Out into the early morning air with its hint of coming spring she went, walking swiftly to the church where she heard mass and made her confession. At prayer she would make her decision.

She knelt with the few worshippers who had gathered, putting all her being into a plea for guidance. Rapidly she thought of her whole life, its past simplicity, its present troubled nights and days. She thought of her old grandmother, content all her life to be a good woman. She was happy.

Like a great light the thought came to Yvonne. "As long as I was content to be a good woman, a good wife to Richard, to do my woman's work in the world, I was happy. It was only when I began to yearn for something else the problem arose."

When she left the church her choice was finally and irrevocably made.

She returned to the house and spent the morning in a whirlwind of preparation. All her new clothes were neatly packed, every reminder of her success and a dancer destroyed, her old peasant dresses restored to the places of honor in her closet. Then she went to the den. To the surprised Lottie she gave the small phonograph and the records. She carried the chairs and rugs from the other parts of the house back into the den. At the piano she poured in the act of sweeping all her music into the discard.

"No. This I will keep. Richard is willing for me to have this. He has even liked to hear me play."

By noon the only signs of Made-moiselle the dancer were two large new suitcases filled with finery, which stood by the living-room door.

"I won't need you after today, Lottie," she told the colored woman, paying her liberally.

"Sho am sorry Miz Ross," Lottie said. "Been mighty easy working for you. Ever you wants help again just let me know."

Yvonne promised. Just after lunch she left the house, taking with her the two large bags. At the station in New York she checked them both, and then tore up the stubs. There were no marks of identification on any of the clothing they contained.

As Yvonne tore up the two stubs and dropped the pieces into a nearby waste basket she felt she had destroyed the last link that bound her new life to the house. There remained the breaking of the links that united her to the theatre.

"I AM LEAVING TONIGHT"

In her dressing room she sorted her costumes. Presently there was a knock at the door.

"Come," she called.
Drake entered. "You wanted to see me, Madame Ross?" he asked.

"Yes, I am leaving tonight, tonight—tonight—but that is impossible."

"My husband returns tomorrow—my contract provides that I may leave when he returns."

"But, Mrs. Ross," in his astonishment he forgot to say, "madame," "but Mrs. Ross, you are a tremendous success. I'll give you twice the salary if you'll stay—that and any length contract you want."

Yvonne shook her head. "I am leaving," she said firmly. "I called you to ask among other things whether the girls here, any of them, could use my costumes."

"Why, of course, of course, we'll have to try to substitute one of them for your act. But you mustn't consider leaving us. It's unthinkable. No notice—"

He was growing angry. Yvonne came close to him and took his hands in hers. "My friend," she said simply. "I must leave. I do not wish to leave, I love my work."

"A safety match is the only kind that interests a girl with money to burn."

She: Do you think kissing is proper?
He: Well, we can put our heads together and study the matter.

"They won't let this novel go through the mails, but I got it for only fifty cents."
"I'd call that dirt cheap."

A LIGHT POST
Friend: How did you manage to break off that big lamp post when you struck it with your car?
Motorist: Oh, it was really a light post.

GOES BACK ALL RIGHT
Mrs. Blabb: She boasts that her dining-room furniture goes back to the early English period.
Mrs. Stabb: Bunk, my dear. It goes back to the installment house at the first of the month.

THE PAIN OF RHEUMATISM!

"Fruit-a-tives" Rid Him of Trouble of Long Standing

A sufferer from rheumatism for years, Mr. S. Floyd, Nanaimo, B.C., turned to "Fruit-a-tives". He writes: "In a short while I had relief. 'Fruit-a-tives' worked like a charm." Do you have the terrible agonizing pains of rheumatism—can't work, can't sleep, torture all the time? "Fruit-a-tives" will give you relief just as it has helped thousands of others. No more pain for the rest of your days! Get a box to-day. Sold in all drug stores.

You have been most kind to me. But I beg you not to make it hard or difficult for me. I am only doing what I must do.

His face softened. "You know best," he sighed. "But if you ever really want to come back to the stage, will you come to me?" "I promise," said Yvonne solemnly.

As Yvonne stepped onto the stage that evening she felt a great wave of sorrow sweep over her. Poised for her first step, tears filled her eyes. This was her farewell. Spurred by her renunciation she danced as she had never danced before. There was a tumult of applause as she finished. It caught Yvonne's heart and stopped her in the wings. She ran back to the orchestra. They played again for her, Yvonne was swept into the dance everything forgotten save that she was bidding goodby to a part of herself.

She repeated each of her three numbers that evening, and at the close of the last, one stumbled from the stage, her eyes wet with tears. Drake was waiting for her.

"You must not leave us," he cried. "Come, name your price! You shall have whatever you want, if you will only stay."

Mrs. Ogden beside him was crying. "Yvonne, Yvonne," she wept. "You have no right to give up this beautiful thing. Stay here. Let me go to Richard, and explain. Don't give up your art. Don't."

But Yvonne was not to be moved. Her decision was made. She smiled sadly at them.

"Farewell," she said. And a little later she left the theatre for the last time.

Thursday morning!
Yvonne was not one to relapse over the past. In the morning light all the last three months seemed unreal, a dream. She put on a working dress, tied her curls in a big white handkerchief, and proceeded to give the house such a cleaning as would have made Lottie's eyes stand wide with surprise. This finished, she turned her attention to her cooking. Richard must have the pastries, the salad, the vegetables he liked best. All afternoon she toiled at the labor she loved. Toward 6 she bathed and dressed in her silk peasant costume. And then she sat down to wait.

WHERE IS RICHARD?

Seven passed, and no Richard. Yvonne went to the piano and played for a little.

Eight o'clock and no Richard. Yvonne went to the kitchen and cast anxious looks at the feast that would be served.

Nine o'clock. Richard had not arrived. Yvonne was not anxious about him, but she was heavy-hearted over his delay. She was very tired from her long hard day. Slowly her head dropped and presently she slept, sitting in a low rocker. She woke with a start. It was after 10. Richard was not coming then of this she felt sure. Slowly, too tired and unhappy for tears, she went to her room and fell into a heavy slumber.

She awakened early in the morning. Friday. Richard would surely come today. She got out of bed and dressed in her working garments and then started toward the stairs. At the top of the stairway stood one of Richard's bags. Yvonne's heart stopped. beating. How had it come there? After a long silent look, she went to the door of his room. She listened; but there was no sound. Softly she opened the door. A crack. Yes, Richard had come home. He was sleeping quietly there in his bed.

Such bitterness swept over Yvonne as to make her put out her hand and catch the door to save herself from falling. The sound made Richard wake. He turned and stretched in bed and then caught sight of her, standing there frozen in the half-opened doorway.

"Yvonne," he called. "Yvonne, what is it? Don't look so frightened. I got in late last night and decided not to disturb you. Come here and kiss your husband, child."

Yvonne went forward listlessly and kissed him. Then she sat on the edge of the bed while he held her hand and talked cheerfully about his trip.

Finally—"Got in last night in plenty of time to make the house for dinner, but I ran into Bob West at Grand Central and nothing would do but that I go to the club with him for dinner. Got to talking afterwards and barely made the train home. Sorry you weren't awake."

Yvonne got to her feet. "I will make breakfast ready, Richard," she said.

"But look here," Richard protested. "You don't seem a bit glad to have me back. Been lonely for you hasn't it?"

"No. I have not been lonely," Yvonne said quietly. "You will be"

THE FORD CAR STEEL SPOKE WHEELS

Close up view showing how Ford Specified Tire fits into drop centre rim.

Greater Strength and Durability

THE Ford Steel Spoke (Drop Centre) wheel is an advanced step in engineering and the result of exhaustive experimental tests. It is smart in appearance, extra strong, having a lasting finish, easy to clean and provides a simple method for mounting and demounting the tire without tools and in a fraction of the time previously required.

The steel rods or spokes, 3/4" in diameter, are electrically welded to rim and hub shell. The finish is enamel baked on steel. Possessing great resiliency and being one solid piece, these wheels have a sturdiness not approached by any other type.

The Ford wheel eliminates loose, squeaking spokes and rims, pinched tubes, chipped or peeling finish, necessity of tire flap, misalignment of tires line to carelessly mounted rims and a host of other wheel and tire ills formerly encountered. It permits of easy steering and no drumming sound is created by the wind.

There is an enormous amount of careful work necessary to build strength and service into the Ford Steel Spoke wheel, and the results justify the engineering study and skill devoted to this feature of the Ford car.
