

Your Hair Is Fluffy, Beautiful And Lustrous In A Few Moments

Glads! Get a 25-cent bottle of "Danderine" and try this Also stops falling hair; destroys dandruff

Your hair becomes light, wavy, fluffy, abundant and appears as soft, lustrous and beautiful as a young girl's after a "Danderine" hair cleanse. Just try this—moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. This will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt and excessive oil and in just a few moments you have doubled the beauty of your hair. Besides beautifying the hair at once Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, forever stopping itching and falling hair. But what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use when you will actually see new hair—fine and downy at first—yet—really new hair growing all over the scalp. If you care for pretty, soft hair and lots of it surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knoviton's Danderine from any drugist or toilet counter, and just try it.

REMOVING VARIOUS STAINS

Stains of one kind or another being of such common occurrence, housewives would do well to keep certain of the most ordinarily needed antidotes always in the house. Borax ammonia, turpentine, paraffin, soap, soda, starch and lemon are included amongst the household stores. To this may be added Fuller's Earth, French chalk, benzine, and salts of lemon, the latter chemical, however, to be kept out of the way of doing harm, as it is a powerful poison. It should be remembered that salts of lemon, chloride of lime, and the like bleaching agents, should only be resorted to in extreme cases, as all exercise a more or less injurious effect upon the fabric.

A great many stains on washing fabrics, if treated while quite fresh, will often yield to a solution of borax poured boiling hot through the material (which should be stretched across the mouth of a basin) or even to boiling water without the borax. To steep in sour buttermilk, subsequently bleaching in the sun and air, is also efficacious in many cases.

Tea stains on linen, if fresh, may be removed by first rubbing them in cold water and then pouring boiling water through the fabric tightly drawn over a jug or basin, while if dry the preliminary soaking should be in glycerine. Coffee stains are to be treated similarly.

Blood stains should at once be moistened with cold water, covered with powdered starch and left to dry, a preparatory soaking for several hours in cold water should be given. Ink stains on linen, when fresh, may be got out by pouring boiling water or milk through the fabric. Older stains may be rubbed with salt and lemon juice, or with a solution of lemon, the fabric being moistened with hot water during the application, the rinsed carefully out.

Mildew stains on linen may some times be overcome by rubbing with lemon-juice, followed by salt, or 1 older cases by damping the spots soaping them on both sides, rubbing in powdered chalk with or without a admixture of salt, and laying on the green to dry. The marks may be moistened once or twice during the process, and a second application of soap given if necessary. Two or three nights and days of exposure to air are wonderfully restorative to mildewed linen, and for bad patches the simple application mentioned above may be superseded by spreading both surfaces with a paste composed of two table-spoonsful each of salt and the juice of a lemon.

Mud stains on linen should be rinsed in ammonia before sending the garment to the wash.

Oil spots on linen may be got out by pouring a strong solution of soda through the fabric and then washing thoroughly with soap. Machine oil stains on linen should be well rubbed with a rag dipped in ammonia before washing.

Grass stains on linen should be rubbed with paraffin or spirits of wine, rinsed in clear water before being put into the wash.

OLDEST KNOWN BOOKS.

One of the oldest writings in the world is an inscription in Egyptian hieroglyphics preserved in the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford, England. What is regarded as the oldest piece of literary composition and the oldest book extant is in the Papyrus Prisse in the Louvre at Paris. It is in Egyptian Hieratic writing and it is ascribed to H. C. 2520, but supposed to have been composed as early as B. C. 3550. Curiously enough, says a writer in the Editorial Review, it consists of a treatise on "How to Behave Wisely." Much of the advice given in language quaint and forcible is applicable to this day just as to that bygone past.

The oldest guide book in the world is Pausanias' "Description of Greece" describing a journey made through that land of wonderful memories by an observant old antiquarian of amiable temper and simple faith.

The old Latin document is a was table in cursive lettering formed by a stylus and dated A. D. 55. It was discovered at Pompeii in 1875 and can now be seen in the National Museum at Naples.

The Book of Kells, produced in the seventh century, is "the glory of Trinity College, Dublin. The taste and delicacy, the originality and the elaboration of coloring place it among the wonders of the world."

The book is so perfect that one can examine it most closely under the strongest magnifying glass without finding lack of alignment or irregularity in interplacement. The medieval miniaturists raised the art of illuminating to the highest pinnacle of perfection. The most renowned miniaturist was Guido Clovio (1498-1578). The examples of his work in the British Museum are not placed on public exhibition, being regarded as too precious to run risks at the hands of our curio hunters or iconoclasts.

Amongst the superlative "rarities" are the printed books set forth during the first twenty-five years after the printing art had come to stay. Such are the twenty-four copies of the Mazarin Bible of Gutenberg and Schiæffer about 1445, the Mentz Psalter by the same printers in 1457, this was the first book printed with date, the first edition of Livy (1469), the only copy of which on vellum is in the British Museum, where also are the Bedford Hours, the Strozzi Book of Hours and Queen Mary's Psalter.

It is now almost impossible to obtain an example of Caxton's press, except in portions of books. It is known that there are 560 examples extant in the world. England possesses four-fifths of that number, thirty-one being unique.

THE FIRST DENTIST

(From Harper's Weekly.) Dental therapeutics dates from a very remote epoch. It is not known when this art commenced, but it is well known that the Egyptians practised it to a considerable extent. On a papyrus scroll estimated to date back 3,700 years before Christ, which was found buried at the feet of the god Anubis, they were found written remedies against painful molars and a way to alleviate troubles of the teeth by means of pulverized drugs. The art of "filling" is very remote. Egyptian mummies have been found with molar cavities very carefully closed. Other have artificial teeth which show that in very ancient times this dental process was known. The Chinese cured toothache 2,700 years before our era. One of their methods was to put iron filings in the cavities.

FORMAL ROOMS.

The dark parlor and the haircloth sofa of our Puritan ancestors have been too much maligned to need further ridicule, and yet they were tasteful compared to the reception-room or parlor in many houses of today. Gold leaf and rich brocade are, above all, materials to be used with discretion. Chairs that express cost rather than comfort give a less cheerful aspect to a room than did the black haircloth, which bids fair to be rejuvenated. The formal room in a stately house we may all admire, but a stiff room—never, and these we know are fast disappearing. Taste is rapidly advancing and we find everywhere the most attractive of houses—houses that are a pleasure to enter. We find dining-rooms where blue Delft jars and old pewter are cherished rather than a display of empty cut glass dishes and uninteresting silver, which are only to be tolerated for their use. Demand us, from being too critical. The house that is a home is assured. However, simple, the glow of a fire covers a multitude of sins, and a flowering plant is more to be desired than a marvel of upholstery.

CONCERNING AN INVESTITURE.

The King held an investiture of the Orders of Knighthood in Buckingham Palace this summer when a large number of the Birthday Honors were conferred. The company assembled in the Throne Room, and as His Majesty was attended by a goodly number of courtiers and heraldic officials, as well as the Indian orderly officers and the Gentlemen-at-Arms, the scene did not lack any element of brilliance and splendor. When it is remembered that hardly more than a fortnight had elapsed since the publication of the Birthday Gazette, the diligence of Sir Douglas Dawson and the staff of the Central Chancery of the Orders of Knighthood in getting out the insignia so promptly is a feather in their cap. In the old days it was not unusual for several weeks to pass by before the investiture was held, and as the recipients of knighthoods were technically unable to use their new dignities until they had actually received them, a good deal of inconvenience and heartburning was sometimes the result. It may be taken for granted that in future the investitures will be held within two or three weeks of the announcement of the honors. It would not be possible to get the affair through any earlier than that, because some of the recipients have to order their Levee dress for the occasion.

The accolade which accompanies the honor of knighthood is given by His Majesty with the same sword, and it is quite a mistake to suppose that a different blade is used for respective Orders, as that the Sovereign arrays himself in the regalia of the Bath or Star of India when investing the Knights of those franchises. A knighthood is not a decoration, and, except when the new knight receives at the same time a stipend in one of the Orders, there is nothing to show for "Sir Knight," right to be dubbed "Sir Knight." At the head of the Knights Bachelor came Sir Harry Veitch, and with him were representatives of journalists in the person of Sir Edward Cook; of surgeons in the person of Sir John Bland-Sutton; of art in the person of Sir Whitworth Wallis, and a score of others. There were several Orientals among the Indian Orders, but the greater number being conferred by the Viceroy in Calcutta. Sir Richmond Ritchie, of the India Office, got his I.S.O.

The King has devoted the interesting custom, originated in the previous reign, of bidding to the Palace on these occasions a number of humble heroes, for the purpose of decorating them with the medals which bear witness to their gallantry in the ordinary walks of life. By a whimsical chance, the first of these was a scoutmaster of a troop of Boy Scouts, bearing the name of Humble, who received the silver medal for gallantry on account of his having saved four lives of the French coast. Equally whimsical was the fact that the first of the Edward medals for meritorious deeds in coal mining went to a hero of the name of Meriton. Miss Georgina Haines and two other ladies received the Royal Red Cross. The New York Royal Victorian medal was not conferred on this occasion, as it is to be heard in future the portrait of King George himself and a supply of these medals is not yet in stock.

PRACTICALLY SYMPATHY.

Sympathy with the less fortunate among human-kind is becoming more and more wide-spread, and many privileged women are honestly concerned in securing a fairer field for workers and better conditions all round. But are there not some, whose sympathies are genuine, but who are inclined to overlook particulars for generalities, "to disregard the little thing that may be done privately, and glow with righteous satisfaction

A Physical Wreck

Suffered Tortures from Nervousness. Miss Marguerite Lees, 21 Robert St., Hamilton, Ont., writes: "I was a wreck, red and hot, and despondent. I suffered tortures from nervousness, and was totally unable to work. A friend recommended Hood's Sarsaparilla. I commenced taking it and by the time the second bottle was consumed I knew that I was mending. Gradually I grew well. I have used Hood's since. I would not be without it on any account, and do most enthusiastically endorse every word in its favor." Hood's Sarsaparilla today. Sold by all druggists everywhere.

over the big thing done publicly. "I never knew," said a member of several philanthropic committees, "what an 'iron heel' I myself possessed, until something set me to thinking. I didn't want to do my shopping early so that shop girls wouldn't be delayed with their closing. I was wrothy if the butcher dragged give himself and his helpers a holiday when the rest of the world was taking one. I caught myself peaching on the maid's leaving time on her afternoon off. I constantly wanted to throw little extra things on her that
