Saucepans of all sorts will last longer if they are dried after having been washed.

FORESHORE FOOD.
Visitors to the seaside are familiar with the sight of fishermen gathering seaweed.

Another favorite dish with the Irish is a seaweed called carageen or Irish moss, which is found in large quantities on the northwest coast of Donegal.

Some dwellers by the sea make an attractive dish out of laver, which they serve up with oil. Its thin fronds can often be seen glistening in the sun when the tide is at the half-way mark.

Muscles In Head.
The head has seventy-seven muscles—eight for the eyes and eyelids, one for the nose, eight for the lips, eight for the jaw, eleven for the tongue, eleven for the ear, seventeen for motions of the head and neck, one to move the hairy scalp, and one for the eyebrows.

Government Controls Coffee.
The Brazilian Government controls practically all the coffee grown in that country; they only release enough to supply the demand. Hence there is never a glut.

FLOWERS BLOOM HERE AND THERE AND EVERYWHERE
They are fantastic, these flower trimmings! Large bunches of them on the front of evening dresses, small flowers running along the edge of your décolletage, straps of white gardenias, even flowers on hair among the many new novelties.

Dorothy Dix's Letter Box

It is a Good Thing for Young People to Decide on Financial Arrangements Before They Are Married

Dear Dorothy Dix—We are a group of young men and women who were discussing marriage and the pay check, and the question came up as to who should take care of the pay check in a young couple's married life.

Answer:
It fills me with hope for the future of matrimony to hear that young people are trying to decide the financial question before marriage instead of waiting to fight over it after marriage.

So it is at least taking a step in the right direction for a man to inform a girl on the safe side of the altar just how he proposes to budget the family income and what emoluments, if any, the woman who keeps the house and does the work of half a dozen servants may expect.

Certainly no other one thing causes as many heart burns and as much bitterness, and inspires as many fights in marriage as does the money question. It seems to be even more difficult to settle domestically than antagonistic are their opinions on the subject and so fierce the criticisms and recriminations that many and many a household is on the verge of disruption on the first of every month.

So forward-looking are the youth and maidens who devote some time to asking: "How much do you love me?" For though the two questions really mean the same thing they do not always get the same answer in the tell-off.

It seems to me that the young men you quote have worked out a very fair budget and that after the man has paid the household bills, given his wife an allowance for the house and herself, and put definite amount in the savings bank, that he is entitled to keep the balance of the money he has earned for himself.

Only he has no right to ask his wife what she does with the money he gives her. That is hers. She has earned it by the labor of her hands and it is hers to do with as she pleases.

I do not believe that any man should turn over his pay check to his wife unless he is one of the men who has holes in his pocket that money falls through without doing anybody any good, or else is one of the easy marks who will lend his money and leave the bills unpaid. In that case he should let his wife tote the pocketbook.

But for a man to turn over his pay envelope to his wife and have her give him money every morning for his car fare, lunch and cigarettes lessens his self respect. It makes him dependent on her and puts him in the wrong attitude towards her. It makes her his keeper. A man who has sense enough to make money surely has sense enough to be trusted with the few dollars that are left over after he has supported his family.

Dear Miss Dix—How should a boss treat the girls under him? And what should be their attitude towards him? Not all bosses are philanthropists, of course, but when most young girls go to work, the first thing they learn is how to keep the boss from petting them, putting his arms around them and kissing them. This is fun for the boss, but very hard on the girls as they are likely to lose their jobs if they are standoffish.

Often the girl knows what danger she is in and sickens with dread of what may happen to her. Not only her own bread and butter but also that of her destitute family may be dependent upon her meager wage. So she dares not throw up her situation and leave.

In one of O'Henry's stories he tells of the inmates of hell, mere murderers and such like, who refuse to associate with the soul of a man who had ground down his poor girl clerks in his store until he drove them to wrong doing in order to live. I think even that man's soul will highlight the soul of the employer who takes advantage of a girl's necessity and her dependence on her job to force her to submit to his philandering.

As for how a girl should treat her boss, that is equally simple. With respect, but formality. She should keep her distance and not be forever picking lint off of his sleeves or leaning over him when she is taking dictation.

Let it not be forgotten that if there are amorous bosses, there are also girls who trade on their sex and who go into offices for the sole purpose of vamping their employers.

reasoning.
The second canary has spent its life in a soundproof cage into which no bird-song could penetrate. And by a process of self-help, of listening to its own tones, this bird has gradually progressed from the slow chirps of the newly-hatched to the swift warbles characteristic of the adult roller canary.

CUT-RATE SLAYER
SAO PAULO, Brazil — Leonel Barranco, recently arrested here, was charged with 25 murders, many on commissions which netted him from 60 cents to $1.25.

Next, a small tree was stripped of its lower branches and the same kind of stair-case was placed around the trunk. And in thirty seconds after completion the canary is said to have been perched on the top of the tree.

Feather in Her Hat

By JULIE ANNE MOORE

CHAPTER 1
The chair car porter came and took their bags and went off toward the forward end of the coach.

She turned her dark face to the window, but where all day they had looked out at the swiftly flowing September scene she now gazed back at her own smiling reflection. It was, Ann thought, a rather silly smile, a very lovely girl occupying the chair opposite her own.

Rita's blue eyes came up to meet her magazine. "If you could close your mouth a little—"
Yes, of course; but she could not. No more than she could not the emotional stir within her.

And why should she cry? Four months ago she and Rita had taken the Civil Service examination and every hour since she had been waiting for this moment. "Just one short little year," she had promised her mother. "That one short little year was about to begin. A dream had come true.

The grin widened. Suddenly she laughed, a little ascending musical laugh. "I wish you could have heard Father talking to Mother after I'd gone to bed last night. He didn't know my door was open and did he debunk Washington!"

A little impatiently Rita closed her magazine and dropped it on the floor. She found Ann very annoying sometimes. "Mother was fretting," Ann went on, "and Father was trying to reason with her—anyway—Father said, 'Quit worrying about the kid, Ella. She's full of phony ideas and she's got to get them out of her system. A year in Washington will do her a world of good—straighten out some of the kinks. Why—' Father said, 'she thinks Washington is a hotbed of romance. She's expecting to be received at the White House and entertained at the embassies and snatched up by society. Wait until she finds out that Washington is just a maze of catacombs called government bureaus, and that government clerks are as thick as flies, and about as important.' Ann burst out laughing again. "He wanted Mother to think I'd be fed up in a few weeks and go running back home."

Rita yawned, beautifully—as she did everything. "You're quite sure you won't, of course?"
"Sure that I've ever been of anything in my life. To me Washington is the one glamorous city in the world."

"That being the case," said Rita, "you'd better get your things together. We're practically there."

Ann got up, unpinned the brown velour hat from the back of the chair cover and ran a ringed finger up the full length of the long, pointed feather. Before she could sit down again, the train was coming to a stop.

Bill was standing on the outer edge of the packed semicircle drawn up about the gate, and in response to Rita's wave he lifted a big hand.

THE COOK'S CORNER

Try This on Your Husband
While the majority of men like cake, most of them poke a lot of fun at the tiny iced dainties which women so appreciate. And so that the poor darlings may not be neglected, do bake them something special to have for dessert the night you have served the silver decorated ones to your bridge club. This one never fails to win masculine praise.

Coffee Walnut Cake
1/2 cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
2 1/2 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 cup strong coffee (cold)
1/2 cup chopped walnuts
1 teaspoon vanilla

Method: Cream the butter and sugar, add the well-beaten eggs, sift the flour and baking powder and add alternately with the cold coffee. Add the chopped nuts and flavoring and finally the stiffly beaten egg whites. Turn into a tube or loaf pan and bake in a moderate 350 deg. F. oven for about one hour. Remove from the pan and when thoroughly cold, ice with

Coffee Icing
1 cup brown sugar
1/2 cup white sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup strong coffee
2 egg whites

Method: Cook the two kinds of sugar, salt and coffee until it still is a thread. Beat the egg whites stiff and pour over them one-third the syrup, beating all the while. Return syrup to the fire and cook until it forms a soft ball in cold water. Pour this over the icing, continuing to beat until it is the right consistency to spread.

Orange-Rhubarb Marmalade
Four pounds rhubarb, 6 oranges. Peel oranges and cut peeling in small pieces. Boil until tender. Pour off water. Put pulp, peeling and rhubarb together and measure bowl of sugar for each bowl of fruit, and boil 25 minutes.

A Morning Smile

Wife (with newspaper)—"John, it says here that a lawyer told a man in court he was particeps criminis in the affair. What does that mean?"

Hub—"My dear, you ought not to ask me to explain such things to you before the children."

Two girls were having lunch together. "My dear," said one, "why do you always call your mother 'the mater'?"

"Because," answered the other girl, "she managed to find husbands for all my seven sisters."
