Pool At Lambros' Bros. Last Night

Upwards of 300 pool and billiard fans were on hand last night at Lambros' Bros. to witness the handicap match in straight pool played between L. F. Dryden, St. John, and Bill Nicholson, local cue artist.

The game although somewhat one-sided was none the less interesting. Dryden showing the way to Nicholson throughout, overcoming the "spot" and finished well in the lead. At no time was the winner in trouble, having almost perfect control of the ivories.

Nicholson although on the losing end played a good brand of pool which elicited much praise from the spectators.

Sleeplessness

Sleeplessness, like insanity, is greatly on the increase. Modern life, with its hurry and worry and noise, brings an enormous strain on the brain and nerves.

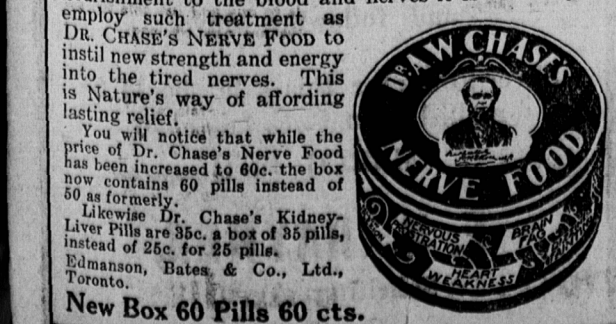

The temptation to depend on sleeping powders or tablets must be fought off if you would avoid catastrophe. Means of reconstructing the starved nerve cells must be sought. Since the digestive system fails to supply nourishment to the blood and nerves it is necessary to employ such treatment as DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD to instil new strength and energy into the tired nerves. This is Nature's way of affording lasting relief.

You will notice that while the price of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has been increased to 60c, the box now contains 60 pills instead of 50 as formerly.

Likewise Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are 35c, a box of 35 pills, instead of 25c, for 25 pills.

Teams Are In Disfavor

(Canadian Press)
PEKING, Feb. 6.—Peking embarked on an ambitious scheme to provide itself with a tramway system and now the city almost regrets its sudden progressive step. Peking is wondering whether it would not have been as well to perpetuate the rikisha.

Ever since the project was started the natives have been opposed to it, and now the foreigners—especially the engineers resident in the city—are bitter in their condemnation of the enterprise. The idea of having a tramway is not so bad, they say, but such a tramway. They declare that a worse job was never done. There are no sleepers for the system, and rails simply being laid on a bed of broken stone, not too tightly packed, and held in place by steel tie-bars.

If the contract is cancelled, as is believed in some quarters, and no one is interested in the upkeep of the system, the rails will become a frightful obstruction to traffic.

Whether or not the job is completed, however, there are a great many people in Peking who will never forgive the promoters of the railway for tearing down two of the city's most picturesque commemorative arches and for cutting a way through the walls which flank the approach to the Forbidden City, where the little emperor in-name-only resides.

Yokohama's Uncertain Future

TOKYO, Feb. 6.—What is Yokohama's future now that the premier port of Japan has been reduced to ruins by the earthquake.

There are no two opinions alike among those who have a real interest in the city and who have studied the question closely. But it is a question which continues to create lively speculation in view of the fast interests involved.

Whatever is done with Yokohama is bound to depend on what is done with Tokyo and the plans for the construction of the Japanese capital are certain to subordinate those concerning the port.

The official view has already been expressed to some extent by the abandonment of the electric carline terminus at Sakuragicho which means that the government is doubtful about the necessity of restoring transportation facilities that formerly connected Yokohama with Tokyo.

Foreigners engaged in business in Yokohama are unanimous in the view that the port can never return to its old status as a city. In spite of the competition of Kobe, which threatened for a time to usurp Yokohama's position as the principal silk centre, the silk trade is likely to cling to the older city.

Yokohama harbor still provides safe anchorage for ships and shipping, officers are bound to maintain offices in the port. Silk and shipping, the banks, landing and forwarding agents, these comprise the mercantile community of Yokohama.

But the city will never return to its former attractiveness as a residential city. Its unique bluff, with its cosmopolitan residences, has gone forever, and will never again be built upon unless it is lowered sixty feet, to quote one authority. Lacking the residential foreign population and the tourist traffic, much of Yokohama's occupation is gone.

One important feature is that everything built at Yokohama now is a bad insurance risk. Every building that goes up is so liable to be burnt down, if not shaken down that insurance companies will not grant protection except for enormously high figures.

Crippens Famous Prosecutor Dead

(By Dominion News Service.)
LONDON, Feb. 3.—Very few anecdotes cling round Sir Richard Muir, whose death has just been announced. His manner in the criminal courts, as a senior counsel to the British Treasury, was much too businesslike and grim to permit of much play of fancy round him.

The Crown prosecutor is usually condemned to look for the bad side of a man's nature, and not the good, and Sir Richard was unrivaled in the art of making it difficult for defending counsel, to enable a culprit to escape the just penalty of the law.

Like a number of other legal luminaries—the present Lord Chief Justice among them—Sir Richard Muir, who was in his sixty-seventh year, began his career in the Press Gallery of the House of Commons.

The son of a Grenock shipowner, he was educated at King's College, London, and called to the Bar just forty years ago, beginning as a pupil of Sir Forrest Fulton, then one of the two senior counsel to the Treasury.

Young Muir's dogged and relentless manner in the courts probably attracted the attention of the officials of the Treasury, so that he was appointed Treasury counsel at the North London Sessions.

There he developed that calm but remorseless method of attack, which was later so often the outstanding feature of big criminal trials at the Old Bailey.

Sir Richard's style as a Crown prosecutor was described as "ponderous but relentless." "He had evidence with great skill," wrote the author of a series of personal sketches in 1920.

"There is no appeal to anything but hard facts, and he goes on, heating, unrelenting, the very personification of an avenging justice, until he has wound the last thread of his web round the doomed man."

Yet Sir Richard had his softer side, and he peeped out occasionally, as in the sensational case of Lieut. Malcolm in 1917, when he said, "I should be less than human if I did not sympathize with all my manhood with Lieutenant Malcolm. I have had as hard a task as any advocate for the Crown ever had."

On the last session of work at the Central Criminal Court, that he really felt he was wielding that big sword of justice which hangs behind the judge.

Justice had to be done, and he let no personal considerations enter into his conduct of a case. His duty was to present the facts of a case in all their nakedness, and the question of mercy was one for others.

It was this absolute lack of passion in all he did which made him such an admirable counsel for the Crown. He was the perfect instrument, and could be relied upon to let nothing be overlooked. He left all questions of emotion to the other side. His very coldness was perhaps, sometimes the opportunity of a defending counsel.

It enabled the defense, by the judicial display of emotion, to throw in relief the implacability of the Law, and perhaps obtain some sympathy for a prisoner, because of the very straits in which he found himself.

Sir Richard Muir's name became best known to the public during the Crippens trial. It was a perfect occasion for the display of his special powers—a case of slowly, day after day, weaving a net round the prisoner which finally completely enclosed him.

It might have been a case of petty larceny, but the emotion Sir Richard displayed, but his patient work of laying bare the truth was deadly in its efficacy. And nobody who ever saw the quiet and timorous figure of Crippens in the dock, facing the massive and bulging figure of the counsel for the Crown, will ever forget it.

The conviction of Stinie Morrison, for the murder of Leon Beron on Clapham Common, was another case in which Sir Richard Muir's coldly brilliant methods were seen at their best.

And in later times, Bevan, himself, something of a genius in finance, had an opportunity of realising what it meant to be pitted against this master of detail and painstaking care.

"Sir Richard Muir, in opening the case for the Crown," a phrase so often seen in the newspapers—meant primarily, that nothing would be overlooked or undone to prove the guilt of the prisoner. That is the business of counsel for the Crown, and few Treasury counsel have been so efficient in that role.

Sir Richard's last case at the Old Bailey, was in December, in which William Kimber was charged with the murder of a child.

Poincare Gov't.

costs 295 francs. It costs forty centimes to ride on the Paris underground, second class, as against fifteen centimes before the cost of living started to climb.

These are examples of the way the so-called "German counter-offensive" is beginning to produce results in France. The Germans are not responsible for the serious economic plight of the French, except if the indemnity had been paid at France's own figures, there would be money for all. But Germany has succeeded in holding off payments, and the French are seeing via ordinary, and not all too dizzily mount higher and higher.

Premier Poincare's eventual downfall is inevitable under these conditions. He may manage to hold on a little longer, but he cannot fight against "la vie chere". His answer to the growing complaints of the people is to increase taxation. Taxes must be increased to make France solvent; but the Poincare government has let Germany slip further away from reparations, and has spent uselessly on military expenses and loans to France's ill-fated allies enough money to balance the budget if the money could be recovered.

It is impossible for any French statesman associated with such mistakes to remain indefinitely in power while present conditions prevail. M. Poincare's day has been passed. He cannot solve the difficulties he has created, and the day is not far off when he will be overwhelmed by them.

Michigan Hard Hit.
DETROIT, Feb. 6.—Lower Michigan lay beneath a glaze of ice today, with transportation crippled and communication partially interrupted. Rain that fell and froze made motor and pedestrian traffic precarious. In Central Michigan and in the upper part of the lower peninsula drifted snow and zero temperature were reported.

An Almas despatch said one of the heaviest snowstorms of the winter, driven by a high wind, and piled great drifts throughout Central Michigan. Bus lines cancelled their schedules and trains were running hours late.

by the man in the street, but as the Soviets attach importance to the phrase he willingly subscribed to it.

Affirming that Russia and Germany ought to enter the League of Nations, Premier MacDonald says that there would be difficulty in the case of Russia, but that Germany's inclusion must be insisted upon.

Discussing relations with France, he expressed the opinion that the great drifts throughout Central and Eastern Europe, which the British government has been mainly responsible for past misunderstandings, but adds: "All that is gone, Great Britain will no longer be content to sit and watch events, and the result of this new attitude seems to be succeeding beyond expectation."

The Premier ridiculed the gloomy prognostications of falling securities when Labor took power and asserts that securities are rising and that the business world is looking forward with relief to a period of stability.

(British United Press)
LONDON, Feb. 6.—It is understood from the best authority that Premier MacDonald has concluded the preparation of a momentous speech which outlines the policy which the Labor government will pursue in parliament when the House assembles.

The Cabinet seems agreed that the domestic situation is largely dependent on conditions prevailing in Europe and until some improvement is made across the channel in the Ruhr Valley and Palatinates there can be no substantial progress at home. It was with this viewpoint that the government recommended the immediate

Menaces To The Lumber Trade

(Canadian Press)
BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 6.—Tax and transportation costs must be reduced if North American lumber is to be a competitive factor in the markets of the world, said Angus McLean, of Bathurst, N. B., former president of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association, at the opening session of the association here.

Mr. McLean declared that few Canadian lumber companies showed a normal profit in 1923, due to the heavy decline in European trade and that lower costs have enabled Scandinavian countries to corner most of the European demand for lumber.

Mr. McLean warned the lumbermen against "artificial stimulation" of the pulp and paper stock industry, which, he said, now is the second largest in Canada. He also warned against unfair prices that will stifle the industry.

Figures given showed that Canada's foreign trade exceeded $2,000,000,000 in 1923, an increase of $270,000,000 over 1922. The trade balance in Canada's favor exceeded $113,000,000.

Several other New Brunswick men attended the convention.
