THE SEA HAWK
by RAFAEL GARABATI

CHAPTER XXVI (continued)

Quivering with rage, Asad watched his departure. On the point of commanding him to return, he checked, tearing lest in his present mood Sakrel-Bahr should doubt his authority and under the eyes of all refuse him the obedience due. He knew that it is not good to command where we are not sure of being obeyed or of being able to enforce obedience, that an authority once successfully flouted is in itself half-shattered.

Whilst still he hesitated, Marzak, who had also risen, caught him by the arm and poured into his ear hot, urgent arguments entangling him to yield to Sakrel-Bahr's demand.

"It is the sure way," he cried insistently. "Shall all be jeopardized for the sake of that wretched daughter of perdition? In the name of Shaitan, let us be rid of her; set her ashore as she demands, as the price of peace between us and him, and in the security of that peace let him be strangled when we come again to our moorings in Algiers. It is the sure way—the sure way!"

Asad turned at last to look into that handsome, eager face. For a moment he was at a loss; then he had recourse to sobriety.

"Am I coward that I should refuse all ways but sure ones?" he demanded in a withering tone. "Or art thou a coward who can counsel some other?"

"My anxiety is all for thee, to know came up the companion.

"Well?" the Basha greeted him eagerly, thankful for this chance to turn the subject.

Biskaine was downcast. His news was to be read in his countenance.

"The task appointed me was difficult," said he. "I have done my best. Yet I could scarce go about it in such a fashion as to draw definite conclusions. But this I know, my lord, that he will be reckless indeed if he dares to take up arms against thee and challenge thine authority. So much at least I am permitted to conclude."

"No more than that?" asked Asad.

"And if I were to take up arms against him, and to seek to settle this matter out of hand?"

Biskaine paused a moment ere replying.

"I cannot think but that Allah would vouchsafe thee victory," he said.

But his words did not delude the Basha. He recognized them to be no more than those which respect for him dictated to his officer.

"Yet," continued Biskaine, "I should judge thee reckless too, my lord, as reckless as I should judge him in the like circumstances."

"I see," said Asad. "The matter stands balanced that neither of us dare put it to the test."

"Then is thy course plain to thee?" cried Marzak, eager to renew his arguments. "Accept his terms, and—"

But Asad broke in impatiently.

"Everything in its own hour and each hour is written. I will consider what to do."

Below on the waist-deck Sakrel-Bahr was pacing with Vigitello, and Vigitello's words to him were of a tenor identical almost with those of Biskaine to the Basha.

"I scarce can judge," said the Italian renegade. "But I do think that it were not wise for either thou or Asad to take the first step against the other."

"Are matters, then, so equal between us?"

"Numbers, I fear," replied Vigitello, "would be in favor of Asad. No truly devout Moslem will stand against the Basha, the representative of the Sublime Portal, to whom loyalty is a question of religion. Yet they are accustomed to obey thee, to leap at thy command, and so Asad himself were rash to put it to the test."

"Aye—a sound argument," said Sakrel-Bahr. "It is as I had thought."

Upon that he quitted Vigitello, and slowly, thoughtfully, returned to the poop-deck. It was his hope—his only hope now—that Asad might accept the proposal he had made him. As the price of it he was fully prepared for the sacrifice of his own life, which it must entail. But it was not for him to approach Asad again; to do so would be to argue doubt and anxiety and so to court refusal. He must possess his soul in what patience he could. If Asad persisted in his refusal, undeterred by any fear of him, then Sakrel-Bahr knew not what course remained to him to accomplish Rosamund's deliverance. It proceeded to stir up mutiny he dared not. It was too desperate a throw. In his own view it offered him no slight chance of success, and did it fail, then, indeed, all would be lost, himself destroyed and Rosamund at the mercy of Asad. He nourished the faint hope that in that coming fight—if indeed the Spaniards did show fight—some chance might perhaps present itself, some unexpected way out of the present situation.

He spent the night under the stars, stretched across the threshold of the curtained entrance to the poop-deck, making this a barrier to his body whilst he slept, and himself watched over in his turn by his faithful Nubians, who remained on guard. His awakened when the first violet tints of dawn were in the east, and quietly dismissing the weary slaves to their rest, he kept watch alone thereafter. Under the evening on the starboard quarter step the Basha and his son, and near them Biskaine was snoring.

CHAPTER XXVII
THE MUTINEERS

Later that morning some time after the gale had awakened to life and such languid movement as might be looked for in a waiting crew, Sakrel-Bahr went to visit Rosamund.

He found her brightened and refreshed by sleep, and he brought her reassuring messages that all was well, encouraging her with hopes which he himself was very far from entertaining. If her reception of him was not expressly friendly, neither was it unfriendly. She listened to the hopes he expressed of yet effecting her safe deliverance, and whilst she had no thanks to offer him for the efforts he was to exert on her behalf—accepting them as her absolute due, as the consequence of the debt that lay between them—yet there was now none of that gloom amounting almost to scorn which hitherto had marked her bearing.

Rope of Judas

LONDON, Nov. 3.—During excavations for the new Caversham Bridge at Reading, the discovery has been made of the foundations of a fourteenth-century chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

The chapel was a shrine, and the great attraction to the pilgrims was an iron spear, said to be the historical spear which pierced the side of Christ, and which, according to tradition, was brought to Caversham by an angel with one wing.

Another relic was part of the halberd with which the pilgrim Judas Iscariot hanged himself. The spot also contained a silver-plat through the image of the Virgin.

The shrine, which belonged to the Canons of Notley, in Buck. just west of a jar of Bowles Red Pepper, was dismantled by John Per Rub, made from red pepper, London at the dissolution of the at any drug store. You will have the quickest relief known.
