THE OWL

Be not content with what may be: Be sure you see what you should see. —Blacey The Crow.

Over in a certain place in the Green Forest a Crow was calling. Anybody who heard him was sure that their father Blacey was mistaken when he said that it wasn't a Crow. How could it be any one else? Who? Was there with a voice like a Crow?

That voice was cawing "Owl Owl" and sounding more and more excited. That was exciting news. Yes, sir, it was so. Big Owls, like Hooty the Great Horned Owl and his big cousins, are the enemies who, next to Man, are most feared by Blacey the Crow and his tribe. That is, they are feared after dark. Then Owls can see well while Crows cannot, for theirs are daylight seeing eyes. But in daylight it is a different matter. Then most Owls are sleepy. They sit and wait, and do not like sunlight and want to remain quiet in some dark place. When a Crow finds an Owl asleep even big Hooty, he calls all the Crows in the neighborhood, and they gang up to make things unpleasant for the Owl. Flying about him and screaming at him at the top of their voices. Now and then one will be bold enough to dart in and peck him. One alone wouldn't dare do that. The gang makes them bold.

As the five young Crows listened to that stranger's voice they grew more and more excited. It would be fun to plague an Owl and they were itching for fun, that kind of fun. They couldn't believe Blacey when he said that wasn't the voice of a Crow and that he didn't believe there was an Owl there. They thought he was just too suspicious and said so among themselves. They wanted to go over there and find out.

So Blacey agreed that they should go over near enough to see that Owl if one was there.

Costly Carelessness

South lost his contract in today's deal by a careless play at the very last trick.

West Dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:
East South West North
1♥ Double Pass 1NT
2♣ 4♣ Pass 5♣
Pass Pass Pass

West opened the heart nine, and declarer, without thinking, played low from dummy. East, after careful consideration, put on the deuce and West promptly shifted to a diamond. He knew that East must have some honor in hand, and it was patently absurd to shift to spades or clubs. If East wanted a spade shift, it was certainly easy for him to take the first trick and return a spade!

When the diamond shift came from West it was all over for declarer, no matter how he played. He tried the queen finesse, but East won and returned a heart. South finally had to give up another diamond trick and his contract.

The heart nine, in view of the bidding, was a significant card and should have been, turned to excellent account by the declarer. He should have covered with the jack in order to prevent a diamond shift. East would win and undoubtedly lead another high heart. Declarer ruffs with an honor, then cashes one high trump and his spade tricks. He enters dummy with a club strips the last spade by ruffing high goes back to dummy with a club and leads the heart eight. East is marked with all the high hearts; when he covers the eight he is conceded the trick declarer discarding a diamond. Now East has the choice of returning a diamond up to dummy's major tenace or a card from another suit which will let declarer discard his remaining diamond while ruffing in dummy.
