THE CRISIS IN THE ENGLISH CHURCH.

and are consequently reluctant to take any decided steps. They exhort their priests to desist from the practices which have given most offence—as for instance from the use of incense, and from urging the duty of confession. But some of the priests, clinging to their practices, which they value, seem disposed to refuse obedience to the bishops. Meanwhile the laity are obliged to stand by and look on. Lay parishioners have no legal right to interfere in the services of the parish church. The ordering of these belongs to the clergyman, who has over him only the bishop; and the bishop can enforce obedience only by a tedious and costly legal process, on which he is naturally adverse to enter.

THE PROBABLE ISSUE.

What will be the issue of such a state of things? The Protestant party call for changes in the law which shall give the laity a voice in determining the form of religious services in their parish church, and shall define more precisely the ceremonies that may be used. Many of them are especially eager to have confession to the priest forbidden. But impartial observers perceive that there is no chance of obtaining such legislation from parliament, which is itself divided, and recoils from a subject beset with difficulties. Many among the Anglo-Catholics plead that the church herself should be permitted in her own ecclesiastical assemblies and courts to deal with these questions. But to this parliament will not consent, for it would mean the atrogation of parliament's own control. If the established church desires to remain established, she will have to submit to be governed by the state. In despair of escaping from the obstacles which beset every path, many have come to believe that the ultimate issue may be to disestablish the church, following the example which the states of the American union set long ago, and which was set in Ireland in 1869. Both the low Protestants and the more advanced Anglo-Catholics welcome this idea, the former because they think they could crush Ritualism, the latter because they value spiritual independence. Should the struggle continue—that is to say, should the Ritualists refuse to listen to the voice of the bishops who ask them to refrain from offending Protestant sentiment be maintained at its present temperature—the Church of England may be rent by a secession, and disestablishment become a practical question. But it is still too soon to feel confident of this sequel.

It must not be supposed that this conflict has anything to do with party politics. Neither Tories nor Liberals have, as a party, taken up the question. Most of both the high church Ritualists and the low church Protestants are Tories, supporters of the present government, while a very large part of the Liberal party consists of dissenters who stand outside the Church of England altogether, and who, though inclined as Protestants to sympathize with the Church of England Protestants are also advocates of disestablishment altogether irrespective of the present dispute. Thus until disestablishment begins to be, indeed it becomes, a practical issue, the matter will not fall into the hands of party organizations.

Everybody's Pills

Are made especially to cure disorders of the liver. They stimulate the liver, and help it to throw off any excess of bile which may be present. They also correct disorders of the stomach, bowels and Kidneys which so frequently occur in ordinary experience. When the Liver is not performing its proper functions, the following symptoms manifest themselves. You are troubled with drowsiness, yet cannot sleep. You have a poor appetite, and what you do eat does you but little good. You are as tired in the morning as at night. Your tongue is coated, and there is a bad taste in your mouth in the morning, sometimes accompanied with nausea. You are troubled with headache and nervous depression.

WHEN THESE FIRST SYMPTOMS present themselves, a dose of

should be taken immediately, as they will at once gently stimulate the sluggish organs to healthy action, and thus save much needless suffering. These symptoms are nature's method of warning us that something is wrong in the system, and calls for the elimination from it of some impurities which weak or overtaxed organs have failed to carry off.

Everybody's Pills

are easily swallowed, being small in size and sugar-coated. Full printed directions are wrapped around each box. We have every faith in Everybody's Pill, and are prepared to back it with

Our Positive Guarantee

We hereby authorize every druggist or merchant selling "Everybody's Pills" to refund the money on a twenty-five cent box, if, after using three-fourths of contents of box they do not relieve constipation and headache. We also warrant that five boxes will permanently cure the most obstinate case of constipation if taken according to directions. Satisfaction or no pay when "Everybody's Pills" are used.
