GIRL CAUSES 25 DUELS.

(By British United Press.)

VIENNA, August 16.—A pretty woman in a pink and white costume has given rise to twenty-five challenges to duels at the university in Hungary.

She is a little provincial, and her philosophy of life is to share the prejudices of the women members, and approved his wife's attractive attire, as, no doubt, the other husbands did, although they were unable to admit their real views to their wives.

These unfortunate men have now to pay the penalty for their marital obedience, for the licensed revenue official has challenged each of the twenty-five who signed the ultimatum to a duel.

The challenges are not a joke, as duels are still a recognized means of settling points of honor in Hungary.

Thousands of Homes Now Heated this NEW WAY

McCLARY'S Furnacette has transformed thousands of cold, badly heated Canadian homes into homes of genial warmth and comfort—at 30 to 50 per cent. less cost than was formerly required to heat them by old-fashioned methods.

This remarkable performance is due to a new and revolutionary heating principle. Instead of radiating heat as a stove does, the Furnacette circulates heat. Moist, warm air goes all over the house, filling every corner and crevice. Result—a snug, healthful home that is never too hot or too cold, but always just right.

A Beautiful Cabinet

McClary's Furnacette requires no basement. You place it in your living or dining room as you would a fine piece of furniture. It's all steel, porcelain enameled finish is easy to clean. It creates a dust-free atmosphere. It lifts air in through openings at the bottom, heats and moistens it and circulates it evenly into every room.

Drastic Changes in Lobster fishing

(Canadian Press)

VINEYARD Haven, Mass., Aug. 16.—Drastic changes in the fishing laws to permit the taking of "short" lobsters which have not reached the age of reproduction instead of those larger size which are the best breeders, are advocated by George Beeble, Hough in the Vineyard Gazette. Mr. Hough's conclusions, made after a survey of the decline of the Massachusetts lobster fishery, are supported by Dr. Francis H. Herrick of the biological laboratory of Western Reserve University, a recognized authority on the lobster.

In connection with the survey it was recalled that a century ago it was possible for any youngster on the Massachusetts coast to wade into the water and pick up all the lobsters he wanted. Fifty years ago a fisherman north of Cape Cod used large hooped nets instead of lobster pots in making their catches, and at about the same time a Canadian cannery once reported that an August gale had piled lobster to the depth of from one to two feet for five miles along the shore in the vicinity of his cannery. He estimated that the storm had strewn an average of 100 lobsters along every two rods of the shore.

But these days have long since passed, and the steady decline of the number of lobsters in New England waters is attributed in the report of the survey to the fact that more are being destroyed annually than are being reared. By protecting even a smaller number of larger lobsters, the report says it would be possible for the state to accomplish considerably more than by trying to protect a larger number of small lobsters.

Because the lobsters are nine inches in length now protected by state laws have not reached the age of maturity in which is being rapidly exterminated.

Several attempts have been made to regulate this extermination of a valuable food supply. Many years ago the idea of a closed season was conceived, but no experiment with such a season was successful. The reason is found in the fact, little known before 1900, that lobsters spawn only every other year, and thus a closed season of two or three months, although hard on the fisherman, did not give real protection to the lobster.

Another attempt at restriction was the effort to protect the egg-bearing females, or "berried" lobsters, but to exterminate males and keep only females would obviously not tend to increase production of young lobsters. Such a law was too hastily evaded by brushing off the eggs from a "berried" lobster.

Hatcheries where young lobsters were produced and set free in the coastal waters have also been established. The federal government was interested in this experiment as early as 1893. Hatcheries and as early as 1893 hatcheries were buying egg-bearing lobsters and hatching the eggs artificially. But fish caught in great schools to pounce on the little lobsters that were turned loose in the waters outside of the hatcheries. Helplessness of the lobster larvae made them easy prey. If they had been kept in captivity until they reached the second stage, in the rate of burrow into the sand, the rate of survival would have been higher.

The Rhode Island fisheries commission experimented with this method of protection of the young lobster but it was demonstrated that this protection must be supplemented to legal protection of large lobsters.

The plan favored by Dr. Herrick and Mr. Hough for a double gauge and protection was first suggested in 1901 by Dr. George W. Field, then lecturer in economic zoology at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The plan means permanent protection of large adults beyond a certain size and of young up to a certain limit between these two permanent limits. In place of the present limit protected of adolescent lobster which mature on a present lobster which would conserve the reproducing lobsters and would also protect the very small lobsters until they were large enough for food.

Such a law the larger lobsters bear the greater number of eggs; the larger lobsters are more immune to enemies; and there is no practical limit to their size or age; such a law is easily enforced; such a law would greatly benefit the fishing industry immediately and in the future; older lobsters are not so tender or desirable for the market as "shorts."

Dr. Herrick suggested a protective gauge with a gauge of seven to eleven inches, or eight to twelve, a vast improvement over the single gauge which is so destructive. Under the present law every lobster more than nine inches long is liable to capture. At the age of its maturity, just as its productive powers are at their development, protection is withdrawn and the potential producers of thousands of lobsters are killed. Under the proposed double standard of protection the lobsters that are reached a certain size would be able to continue to supply lobsters to replenish the supply. Lobsters live as long as fifty years under proper conditions.

"There is only one sovereign remedy," said Mr. Herrick, "to bolster up, and if it is still in the realm of possibility, to restore any depleted fishery, and that is to transplant more blood into its system; to increase its breeding power, or what amounts to the same thing, its supply of eggs to the same thing, its supply of eggs for breakfast, whereas in this case it takes upwards of 30,000 eggs to produce two adults, so great is the death rate under nature which the law of survival entails. The adult female lobster is a poor parent, accordingly this fishery is depleted not by the thousands or the millions merely, but by the billions."

Malpeque

Rev. A. J. G. Murchison, formerly of Charlottetown and now of Omro, Wisconsin, conducted the services in Princetown United Church on Sunday the 14th inst. The morning text was from Luke 17-17. Were they not then cleansed? Where were the nine? The subject was "The forgotten blessing" and it was shown that while we are the recipients of spiritual and material blessings in this life the question was asked "are we like the nine out of the ten lepers who went away rejoicing only in the fact that they were healed?" The evening sermon was taken from Gen. 50-20 "But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good." The church was filled with an interested audience as Mr. Murchison spent in considerable of his boyhood days in this community, and his many friends here will follow him in his life work with sincere wishes.

Are you fighting against middle-age?

ONE OF the most critical periods of a woman's life comes between 45 and 50. Most women dread the approach of middle-age because they know, only too well, the depressing ailments it brings.

The best preparation for this period a woman can have is a good physical condition. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help her to gain strength and energy. It builds up the appetite and induces natural sleep. The following letters were written by women of middle-age.
