

Yes, teeth lighten

when you remove dingy film

Remove it daily to keep teeth white and sound

WINNING smiles depend on glorious white teeth—and teeth like that depend on freedom from what dentists know as film. Film is a stubborn, clinging coating that ordinary ways fail to remove successfully. It is the chief source of serious tooth and gum disorders—of decay and pyorrhea—a constant menace.

To remove film dentists prescribe the special film-removing dentifrice called Pepsodent. It acts to curdle film so that brushing easily removes it to gentle safety to tooth enamel.

In a few days teeth grow whiter and begin to sparkle. They continue to improve for months. Start today. Get Pepsodent at any drug counter or write for free 10-day supply to The Pepsodent Co., 191 George St., Toronto 2, Ont., Can.

The Golden Girl

CONTINUED

JERRY GOES SHOPPING

So-so had a rousing welcome from Fred and Jerry. They both met her at the Pennsylvania Station, congratulated her on the success of her trip and carried her off to dinner.

Tell me all about Connie," Jerry demanded when they were settled in one of the small restaurants in the West Forties.

"She's well, impatient to get back, and wanted to know every little thing about the flight."

"Does she miss me?"

"Of course, she kept me talking about you most of the time."

So-so felt a little guilty, for Constance had been far more interested in the Golden Girl than in Jerry.

"Did she give you a good time?" Fred asked.

"Oh, my, yes, and she wanted me to stay until she comes back after Christmas." So-so decided to say nothing of the way Constance spent most of her time with Clayton Robbins.

"Well I'm glad you didn't," Fred said.

"So'm I," Jerry chimed in, "and speaking of Christmas, So-so, you've got to do something for me tomorrow. You've got to help me buy Connie's Christmas present, yourself."

"Oh, Jerry," So-so protested. "You don't mean that. You pick out Connie's Christmas present."

"I can't. I haven't the faintest idea what to give her. She's got everything in the world she wants anyway."

"Well, I won't help you, that's flat. The idea of your asking another girl to help you pick out Connie's Christmas present. I'm ashamed of you, Jerry."

"But you're not another girl! So-so, you're just So-so, and you can wiggle out of helping me, so make up your mind to that."

"I won't do it."

"Oh, come on, So-so, please, So-so. Pretty please, pretty please with sugar on it, lots of sugar—"

So-so laughed. "You can't coax me that way, Jerry. I won't do it."

"Yes you will. You're coming in tomorrow. Fred is going to drive us in his car and we're going to buy Connie a Christmas present."

"Well—if Fred comes along too—"

"I'll come and when I see you admiring something I'll snatch it out from under Jerry's nose and buy it for you myself, how's that?" Fred beamed with satisfaction at this solution.

Jerry agreed heartily. "Sure, we'll kill two birds with one stone that way, don't you back out at the last minute, So-so."

"I won't. But I'll admit so many things that Fred will have to take all his savings out of the bank."

Jerry grinned. "Not to mention me. Say, what the heck will I buy for Connie? She wouldn't let me give her an engagement ring and I was

Several grades of tea from the same plant

THE leaves plucked in the spring are vastly different from the leaves plucked from the same plant in the summer and in the autumn. Yet neither the spring tea nor the autumn tea can have complete measure of the three desirable qualities—flavor, fullness and strength. Spring tea must be mixed with autumn tea, India tea with Ceylon tea to turn out a blend as perfect as King Cole.

Other importers can buy the same tea and blend them the same way. But, as you know, they don't.

mighty glad, for the diamond I could give her wouldn't even show beside those she already has."

So-so stirred her coffee reflectively. "She's so crazy about aviation that I think if you could find something she could use in the Icomalden, she'd like that, unless of course you want to give her jewelry."

"I can't afford any good jewelry, So-so, and there's no sense in giving her anything else. We'll see what kind of gimcracks they have in the stores for the young aviatrix."

After dinner they drove out to Minsola and So-so felt a thrill of happiness at Chloë's welcome at the shinningly clean cottage and in the feeling of being at home once more.

The next morning she went to New York with Fred and Jerry. They tried several of the smaller shops first, then went to one of the larger sport establishments. There a willing salesgirl showed them a variety of things designed for a woman flyer. Jerry looked at them scornfully. "Not a useful thing in the lot," he complained.

"Then why not a costume? We have one from Paris, designed especially for the young woman who wishes to fly. Let me show it to you."

She brought out an ensemble of soft green suede knickers, jacket, helmet, a pair of shining russet boots, gauntlets, and a green-gold wrist-watch on a green suede strap.

"Put it on, So-so," Jerry commanded. "Connie's the same size you are, and about the same build. I think she'd like that."

"You'd better ask the price," So-so whispered. "You'll find it's pretty expensive."

Jerry obeyed.

"For the entire outfit, including the watch, $375, and each piece may be bought separately."

Jerry whistled. "Flying comes high—no pun intended. Golly I don't know—go ahead and put it on So-so, I want to see how it looks."

"I hate to wear it if you're really going to give it to Connie," So-so protested.

"Oh, go ahead, So-so I just want to see how it looks. I'll probably get Connie the watch and tell her where she can get the rest of the outfit for herself."

Jerry's voice was irritable and So-so obeyed meekly, following the salesgirl into a dressing room. The things were delightful, there were silver cuff links with tiny airplanes engraved on them to fasten the sleeves of the blouse. A pair of wings with a monogrammed border decorated the pocket, and a little silver propeller held the tie in place. Everything fitted So-so to perfection; even the shiny boots were the right size.

"You are very stunning," the girl said when So-so was ready to go out to show Jerry and Fred, and So-so knew that she had never looked better.

Fred whistled when she came out of the dressing room, "Diana herself," he said. "Oh, boy, So-so you'd knock 'em cold in that outfit any day."

"And wouldn't you get the razor-berry if you came on the field dressed like that? It's too much—still, she's a pretty sight, isn't she Fred?"

"Connie could carry this off to perfection," So-so said. "She's so used to expensive clothes, but I'd be terribly self-conscious in it."

"Too much money," Jerry said gloomily.

"Then why don't you get her the watch, the cufflinks, collar pin and silk shirt—see the cunning little wings embroidered on the pockets."

"That's the ticket, and I won't have to see the old homestead to do that," Jerry agreed. "That's what I'll do."

"De have the pins, links and tailored shirts in stock," the salesgirl murmured. "But you would make no mistake in buying also the jacket, knickers and boots. And the helmet is a treasure."

"I should be at that price—no, I'll just take the things I mentioned. By George, So-so, you are stunning—that color of green makes your hair look like gold. No wonder Fred called you Diana."

So-so blushed at his praise and then looked regretfully at her reflection in the long glass. "It really is smart as smart," she said. "I'm sure Connie will gallop over here and get it the minute she gets back and I tell her about it. Well, Cinderella will put her rags back on again and you can buy her some lunch."

She went to change and Fred turned to Jerry. "Do you think So-so would be angry if I bought that for her? I can get all the little trinkets you're buying, too, the girl said that they had them in stock."

Jerry whistled. "Got it bad, haven't you, Fred? No I don't think she'd be angry, but what good would such an outfit do her?"

"Oh, she could wear it sometimes when she went up with me—I'd just like her to have it, she looks so pretty in it."

"Go ahead, boy, if it will make you feel any better. Connie'll raise the devil with me for letting you buy it, I suppose."

Fred hesitated a moment longer and then went to speak to the salesgirl who was wrapping Jerry's package and addressing it for him. When So-so reappeared Fred had completed his arrangements and was trying not to look guilty.

"Now we'll go and feed you, So-so and then Fred wants me to buy him a bunch of mistletoe to hand over your doorway. I suppose some other guy is buying mistletoe for my girl," Jerry spoke gloomily and So-so looked at him in surprise. Jerry was terribly restless these days, touchy and ready to have a fit of the blues over nothing at all.

"He's under a terrible tension over this flight," So-so decided, "and when that is over he'll be more like himself again."
