found her. I don't believe she ever fainted at all.

"Oh, I shouldn't say that, Lady Ellen. The empty shell striking the book case beside her might have frightened any woman half out of her wits."

"But what was she doing there, anyway? One doesn't come down to look for a book with an electric torch."

Battle scratched his cheek. He seemed unwilling to speak. He began to pace up and down the room, as though making up his mind. At last he turned to the girl.

"See here, Lady Ellen. I'm going to trust you. The Countess conduct is suspicious. I know that as well as you do. It's very suspicious—but we've got to go carefully. There mustn't be any unpleasantness with the embassies. One has got to be sure—"

"I see. If you were sure—"

"There's something else. During the war, Lady Ellen, there was a great outcry about German spies being left at large. Busybodies write letters to the papers about it. We hurt us. The small fry were left paid no attention. Hard words didn't alone. Why? Because through them, sooner or later, we got the big fellow—the man at the top."

"You mean?"

"Don't bother about what I mean, Lady Ellen. But remember this. I know all about the Countess. And I want her let alone."

"And now," added Superintendent Battle ruefully. "I've got to think of something to say to Sir Stanley Digby!"

Maritimers Make Merry At Reunion

Honorable J. L. Ralston was a distinguished guest on Friday evening, when the annual re-union and dance of the Maritime Provinces Association was held in the Al Azhar Temple.

"I shall tell the Maritimers, when I return, of the wheat crops, oil fields, industries and progress which I have found in your west," the honored guest declared, in speaking briefly during the evening. "I want the easterners to know what you are doing here. These provinces are richer because of the maritimers here. I feel confident that in your dreams you will know of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and P. E. I., and look forward to a greater unity in Canada which will bring you more closely together."

Colonel Ralston was accompanied by Brigadier-General D. M. Ormond, and was introduced to the president, upon his arrival at 10 o'clock. Mrs. Lloyd Fenerty, president of the Ladies' Auxiliary; Mrs. E. B. Roach, Mrs. R. Larrabee, Mrs. E. J. Chambers, Mrs. J. W. Speer, Mrs. C. E. Goulding and Mrs. P. A. Holmes received the many guests.

Mrs. E. J. Frege, wife of the retiring president of the association, was presented with a lovely basket of yellow and white chrysanthemums. Mrs. S. J. Blair and E. J. Chambers making the presentation.

The supper tables were attractive with ferns and scarlet cyclamen, while in the main auditorium, which was used for dancing, the flags of the three maritime provinces were used in decoration. Indian names of places in the maritimes were used on the dance programme with unusual effect.

PETERS ROAD AND VICINITY

With mingled feelings of regret and dread broadening into expectancy we behold the long-continued autumn weather drawing to a close and we are being ushered into the portals of invulnerable winter, if we are to consider the present fall of snow as a progenitor of what may follow. The first sleigh with its merry and startling tin-tin-abulation of bells was in evidence on our public highway on Friday last 20th.

Yes, we, who fear the piercing winds and penetrating frosts, dread the approach of King Winter, but once his reign begins, and we become acclimated to his temper, we take pleasure in many diversions of this interesting season. What is more exhilarating than a sleigh-drive behind a rapidly flying courier, as he spurs distance, the delight of the youthful voyager, and at times, of the matured also. Then, again, what is more fascinating than the skater, as he glides swallow-like over the glassy expanse of ice, his body rhythmically accompanying the graceful motions of his steel-shod feet.

Or the snow-shoe equipped pedestrian skimming the filmy atoms of feathery whiteness, as he pursues his meandering fleetness with a zest only equalled by the skilled aborigines of America, the red race of our Canadian northland.

We are always pleased to hear from the Guardian's Southern Correspondent. His language is virile information sound, and no matter who lags behind, we always scan the paper for Southern News.—P.
