The Guardian has been shown a stalk of wheat grown on the farm of Mrs. John Bryenton, Brackley Pt. Road, which measures five feet and four inches in length. The entire field of grain now standing would measure this height on an average all through and presents a splendid and promising appearance.

The Guardian is so accustomed to hearing good words said about the results of a properly conducted advertising campaign that it takes something extraordinary to attract attention. But in conversation with Messrs. Johnson and Johnson the growing popularity and demand for Nulife (Red Blood Tablets) was astounding. Only a short time ago the advertising was placed with The Guardian and already orders are being received from every corner of this Province. Druggists and merchants are constantly sending in orders from all parts of P. E. I. Only an article of worth can reach such proportions of demand, and if Nulife (Red Blood Tablets) was not one of the greatest remedies offered for sale it would not have an ever-increasing demand. Geo. E. Hughes, druggist, City, has now stocked these tablets for his customers and his name is added to the large number of progressive druggists and general stores that sell Nulife (Red Blood Tablets).
