How Can a Conscientious Young Man Avoid Marrying His Spoiled Fiancee?—15-Year-Old Who Dreads Parents' Quarreling—Shall Student Leave College to go With Her Husband?

Dear Miss Dix—Is there any way for a boy with a conscience to escape the results of a youthful folly? I am 21. D. is three years younger. I am just an ordinary fellow with a limited education and limited talents and make a very limited salary.

Miss Dix, this sort of thing has killed all of my affection for D. We quarrel often, and when I do summon up enough courage to oppose her she pulls a kind of fainting fit that you would think no girl in this day and age would stoop to.

It is bad enough to commit a folly. It is worse to perpetuate it. Because you have stumbled once is no reason for deliberately jumping off a cliff and shattering yourself to pieces.

The right thing and the wise thing is to try to atone for your error by making the best possible man you can of yourself and by living a sane, normal life.

You seem to think that you are bound to marry her. Well, then, why not let her break off the engagement? That, in your case, is the easiest thing in the world to do, because her love of luxury will soon make her tire of any man who cannot indulge her in the amusements she desires.

Three months of your refusing to take her anywhere except to a neighborhood theatre, of treating her to nothing more expensive than an iced-cream soda, of cutting out all the automobile rides, will turn the trick, and she will pass you up for some man who is a better spender.

For the theme song of girls like D. is the old ditty: "No cheap man need come around." You may justify yourself in forcing D.'s hand by the certainty that if you married her she would be utterly miserable as a poor man's wife and she would soon leave you for some other man who made more money.

Better make the break now before you are dragged through the hell of a marriage with a whining, complaining, dissatisfied wife who is always having hysterics to get her own way and raising ructions because she hasn't all the finery she desires.

But what a crime a mother commits who raises up such a daughter to curse the man she marries. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a girl of 15. My father and mother quarrel continually and our home is a perfect bedlam. My father worries over financial affairs and my mother is a nervous wreck and I am so unhappy. Is there anything that I can do to keep them from nagging at each other all the time? GEORGIANNA.

I am afraid there is nothing you can do, Georgianna, that will pour oil on the troubled waters of your home, because when your father and mother fight like a cat and dog it is because they get such a kick out of scrapping that they are not willing to deny themselves the pleasure of it even for the sake of their own self-respect or to save you from suffering.

They are intelligent human beings and they know perfectly well that, as the old phrase goes, it takes two to make a quarrel and that there is not one of their spats that could not have easily been avoided if either one had given the soft answer that turns away wrath or if either one had refrained from saying or doing the thing that he or she knew beforehand would provoke the other.

Every husband and wife on earth know how to get the other's goat. They know the topics that are like red rags to mad bulls to each other. They know which are the fighting words to say. They know how to give the mean, sneering laugh or the dirty dig that brings on a battle royal, and so when they do these things it is with malice aforethought.

Why a man should stir up his wife when he knows it is going to bring on a scene; why a woman should bait her husband until she makes him see red; why a husband and wife should want to make their home a place of torment and why they should wish to cause the ones they live with to hate them, nobody can explain. You would think for their own comfort, for their own dignity, they would prefer peace. But they don't.

Still less can you understand why they are willing to subject their children not only to the torment but to the blighting influence of living in a home of discord, but they never seem to take this into consideration, though doctors and psychologists tell them over and over again that the evil consequences of their parents' quarrels follow children through life and blight them morally and physically.

I get many letters like yours, Georgianna, written by children who are poor, miserable little victims of quarrelling parents. They always seem to me the saddest letters I ever receive because the youngsters are so hurt and so miserable and so helpless. And I always wonder if any angry man and woman get enough pleasure out of insulting each other to pay for the hurt they do to their innocent children. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—During the second year of my college years I secretly married a young man for whom I had cared since high-school days. My parents were very intent upon my finishing school. Now my husband is about to leave for the Philippines and I have still a year at college. My father and mother will be broken-hearted if I don't get my degree, but I feel my life is with him. Must I go or must I stay and finish my college course? STUDENT.

If you want to keep your husband, go along with him. Absence makes the heart grow fonder of some other women when a man goes off for a long stay in a strange country. Life is very gay and very full of temptations under tropic skies, and any wife who cares for her husband needs to be on her job.

Frequent short absences are a good thing for husbands and wives, but for them to be separated for long periods of time and especially when they are in different environments is fatal, because they develop along different lines and when they come together they have lost all touch.

If your father and mother are sensible, right-thinking people they will see that it is far more important for you to go with your husband than it is for you to go to college and that your place is with him instead of in a schoolroom. DOROTHY DIX.

Hot Cross Buns

GOOD FRIDAY ONCE CONSIDERED UNLUCKY—PROPER RECIPE CALLS FOR YEAST

During Lent, hot cross buns claim much of our interest. Many bakers feature this bread every Friday during the period while others save them especially for Good Friday and Easter morning.

The custom of eating hot cross buns originated in old England. In ancient times buns, if properly made, were supposed to keep for years. They probably took the place of a pagan sweetmeat served in honor of Easter, a Saxon goddess of the east whose feast was celebrated in the spring.

The sign of the cross on the buns proclaimed it a Christian cake. Often the housewife put the sign of the cross on her bread to prevent the evil spirit from interfering with her baking. As Good Friday was considered the most unlucky day of the year she naturally took every precaution to guard against evil influences and make her baking a success.

Since proper hot cross buns are made with yeast, there are, of course, two good methods—the long process and the short process.

One and one-half cups milk, 1-3 cup granulated sugar, 4 tablespoons butter, 1 teaspoon salt, 1/2 yeast cake, 4 tablespoons lukewarm water, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, 1 egg, 1/2 cup currants, flour.

Scald milk and add butter, salt and sugar. When lukewarm dissolved in lukewarm water. Add 2 1/2 cups flour mixed and sifted with cinnamon. Beat well and add egg well beaten. Mix thoroughly and add currants and flour to knead, from 1/4 to 1 cup more. Knead until elastic and put into a large mixing bowl. Cover with a cloth and let rise in
