heads Army of Thieves,

Says General Mackensen,

Who Devastated Roumania

GEN. MACKENSEN is dismayed, says a writer in La Revue Romaine, of Paris. The reader will be at a loss to guess the cause, and so we'll let the field marshal speak, and the reader will thus better relish the savor of the words which stupefaction draws from him, words reported by a French diplomat just back from Jassy.

"I have led to Roumania an army of soldiers," he said, "and I shall lead them back an army of thieves."

We suspect the field marshal of being master of irony, as we cannot believe in the sincerity of his dismay. Theft and lying are part of the organization of the German army, and we'll take an oath upon it that there have at all times been in the German barracks hours set apart and devoted to the training of all recruits for pillage and shameless falsehood. If this be the case, we must admit that the pupils do honor to their professors, for one cannot reach greater perfection than they. Indeed, it is within bounds to say that the German army practices the super-theft and super-lie in a manner and to an extent worthy in every respect of the great German empire. The history of the past aids us in understanding the present. Theft has

King Victor Emmanuel

Tells of the Sacrifices

Made by Italy in the War

THE representative of Le Matin to whom the King of Italy recently granted an interview describes the impression made upon him by King Emmanuel as one of goodness, earnestness, and simplicity. This was a man, he declares, who was acquainted with facts, not phrases, and whose clear thinking formed its estimate of things and of men. For 39 months, he affirms, the King has not failed to go up daily to the lines and to encourage his soldiers by his presence and his words.

The economic and moral condition of Austria-Hungary was naturally the subject with which he was most concerned, and he seemed, the writer declares, to be wonderfully well informed. He knew by report how things were inside the enemy countries and his own daily experience showed him what the physical and moral condition of the combatants was.

It must not be thought, the King said, that there was the same solidarity between the rear and the front in Teutonic countries as in the democratic nations. There was, on the

at all times been so much at home in the German army that when we go back to the languents, the first really organized German troops, we find a corps duly constituted and solely charged with pillage, massacre and incendiarism. Later when for want of resources the uniform of the lansquenets fell into desuetude, the breeches alone were retained, a large breach intended to receive in capacious pockets large plunder. At that time the Germans were still in the infancy of the art; they have since made progress with their wonderful efficiency.

And when Gen Mackensen pretends not to recognize his soldiers in this army of thieves he is joking; his condescension would be real and sincere if he were to command an army of honest people. I can readily imagine him supervising the pillage with an indulgent and amused eye, even encouraging, if necessary, with a word, like a good father who smiles with tender feelings at the roguish pranks of his children.

Thieves and liars they have been, from the highest to the lowest, from the emperor to the last soldier. The emperor steals countries, massacres populations, and has the high-handed operations sanctioned by means of extorted treaties; the officer lays hands on art collections, on precious wines, proud of the high approbation of his lord and master; the common soldier pillages the poultry yard of the Roumanian peasant and takes away his last handful of cornmeal. Thus all work in this way, like the apaches for the greater glory and eternal renown of Greater Germany.

I jest, and my heart is bleeding at the thought of the awful misery under which the Roumanian peasant succumbs. He needs so little, so infinitely little, for his living, and the German has hardly left him enough on which to die. It seems that, under the German heel, Roumania, already so far from all those she loves, has moved further back, very far, to the end of the world, where no consoling word can reach her, and from that Roumania, cut off from all communication, come only these two certainties: That of hatred, a ferocious hatred of the Roumanians toward Germany, and that of their indomitable loyalty to the cause for which they suffer every instant of their sad existence, and also this mournful chorus: "Roumania is starving to death."

Germany has already commenced in bitterness to harvest what Field Marshal Mackensen's army of thieves has sown in that most fertile Roumanian land.

Sketched Bridegroom.
One of Queen Alexandra's most prized possessions is a pencil sketch of the late King Edward when Prince of Wales, done by an artist in a restaurant in Paris. Each time the ladies were dining soon after their marriage.

What She Wanted.
Mabel—You made an awful fuss when Jack Bullion kissed you last night. Were you calling for help?
Madge—Gracious, no! For witnesses.

The clergyman was preaching a long sermon from the text, "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting." After an hour the congregation became impatient, and one by one began to leave, much to the annoyance of the preacher. At length, as another was about to leave, he stopped his sermon, remarking: "That's right, gentlemen, as fast as you are weighed, pass out."

KING VICTOR EMMANUEL.

contrary, a barrier between them. The soldiers did not know what was going on in their towns and villages. They were subject to a severe discipline, which their leaders maintained harshly, and the only newspapers they read were those which were carefully selected and controlled. How, the King asked, could they share in the political turmoils of the interior?

In reply to a tribute as to the fighting of the Italian soldiers on the Piave, the King said that, indeed they had done well. The effort Italy had made deserved to be known, he added, for she had given her children freely in the war. King Victor Emmanuel, declared there were no men of military age to be seen in the country, except those who were unfit for service; the fields were being tilled by women and children and men past military age. The class of 1900, the equivalent of the French class of 1920 had been in the line for months, he declared. They had, in fact, mobilized all their effectives without restrictions of any kind. Nor, said the King, had the financial effort been any smaller. French and speaking of the industrial and economic situation of the country has made in spite of the difficulties arising from the absence of raw materials needed for war manufactures.

These words of the King of Italy, the writer declares, contained truths which should be known for this nation, which has spontaneously entered a war which was not imposed upon her, had had to face sacrifices which had been doubled by the defection of Russia.

Guns.
There is no known 75-centimetre gun. If there were its bore would be more than 29 inches. The famous French 75-millimetre gun has a bore a little less in size than the American 3-inch field gun, being approximately 2.95275 inches; the German 77-millimetre is a little larger than the American, being approximately 3.03149 inches. French and American shells could be used in the German 77-millimetre guns, probably with little or no change, while German and American shells could not, probably, be used in the French 75's without retouching.

A Famous "Nouveau de Plume."
It is probably quite new to most people that the name "Gyp," of the well-known French novelist, was taken from a Dickens novel. Such is, however, the case. Gyp is the little dog Jip of David Copperfield, with the J changed into a G, so that the initial letter might be the same as that of the Christian name of Countess Syllie Gabrielle Marie Antoinette de Martel de Janville, the lady who is so well known to the French reading world as "Gyp."

His Explanation.
"Before we were married," the English wife complained, "you always engaged a cab when you took me anywhere. Now you think the tram-car is good enough for me."
"No, my darling," replied her husband, "I don't think the tram-car is good enough for you; it's because I'm so proud of you. In a cab you would be seen by nobody, while I can show you off to so many people by taking you in a tram-car."
