

Flaky flat-shaped particles

That's why Old Dutch doesn't scratch

This is so because Old Dutch is made with pure "seismotte" (pronounced air'-mo-tite), a fine, flaky, cleaning and polishing material of volcanic origin, free from harsh, scratchy grit or crude abrasives. You can use Old Dutch on any surface where water may be used for cleaning.

Old Dutch costs less to use. Its flaky, flat-shaped particles cover more surface than do the chunky, gritty particles present in ordinary cleansers. As a result, Old Dutch goes farther and does more square yards of scratchless cleaning per penny of cost.

Old Dutch is ideal for all cleaning from kitchen utensils and floors to glassware and metals. It polishes as it cleans porcelain, enamel, tile, etc. No other cleanser can do so much at so little cost, nor so well at any price.

Confessions of a Debutante

By RUTH A. ABELING (Copyright)

"JEALOUSY"
Saturday, December 30th.

"You've kept us all waiting for dinner—will you never learn the importance of the dinner hour, dear?" Mother looked up as I came into the living room where the family and Jonathan were gathered. She smiled. But to the initiated her impatience was plainly evident in both the smile and tone of her voice.

"She'll discover it soon enough!" This from Jonathan who tweaked my ear and ogled me playfully.

"Is that a warning or a threat?" I asked.

"Both! The fat man'll get you if you don't watch out!" whispered Else, who, hands on my hips, was dancing up and down behind me.

While Jonathan was making an elaborate answer, my hand with a lot of pep back of it, sought Else's sturdy thigh.

"Those girls!" Mother smirked at Jonathan. She had caught the latter part of the by-play.

We were an oddly assorted lot at the dinner table. Dad, at the head of the board, was silent for the most part, occasionally glancing at Jonathan as if he was some new specimen to be dissected and analyzed. There was an element of mild surprise in his glance, as if he had found a third leg or an extra second phagus. Jonathan boomed and beamed, first at mama and then at me. Mama had the air of a peacock strutting about in a yard of ordinary hens. Else was interested only in the legs mama had ordered for the occasion, the liquors and the highly ornamented cigarettes. Of the latter brought by my fiance, I saw her take three at one time and slip two into the bodice of her gown.

We were leaving Dad and Jonathan to coffee and cigarettes when the door bell rang and a few minutes later we found Rita Warren and Tom Hyde in the living room.

"Rita!" Else bounced into Rita's arms. "And Tom!" There was barely a shade less of enthusiasm in the latter greeting.

"Now I can dance with Tom!" Else was bubbling on. "You play something, Sis, something snappy!" She was capering up and down the room.

Tom caught her about the waist. I broke into the steps with a little bit of melody and the two then went whirling and swaying back and forth.

Jonathan, standing in the doorway watched them.

After running over the score twice I stopped playing and Rita took Tom in hand.

It seemed to me that she was a bit too eager, too anxiously possessive. It amused me at the time and slightly lessened my opinion of Rita's charm. She had made it so evident that she herself had no faith in it's retentive quality.

When I started to play again she stood up and held out her arms to Tom.

"You're going to do this one with me!" I heard Else's voice and looked around just in time to see her poking a slim finger into the top button of Jonathan's waistcoat.

He seemed to hesitate.

"You are! You are!" she cried.

I turned away to avoid what I felt would be painfully ridiculous to me.

Later, however, I turned around again and there envisioned Else in the stubby arms of my suitor, while the latter with all the fervor of his stolid words was grotesquely imitating the gyrations of Tom's clothing and figure. Else had clutched him widely in the region between the shoulders. Her crop of curls was pushed bravely up under his terrible chin. They swayed and whirled. A look of unutterable joy and content had settled over the red, up turned features of my fiance.

I stopped playing and swung around on the bench.

"WOUNDED PRIDE"
Monday, January 1st, 1933.

It seemed to me that my anger and resentment was so intense that it should have been felt even before I spoke.

"El—" I started and then a second impulse stayed the word. I turned quickly back to the piano and drowned the echo of my own voice in a crashing chord. No one noticed the break in the music. They had all been too absorbed in themselves.

When finally I stopped, Jonathan, wiping the perspiration from his face came and stood beside the piano.

"I wish we could dance together," he said.

"Yes—don't you." There were little icicles hanging from each syllable.

I started a waltz, ignoring Jonathan who still stood at the piano. Presently he moved at me, half apologetically and then started scuffling the room. Later I noticed Else hanging to his shoulders again.

Suddenly in the midst of my annoyance over Else and Jonathan I became aware of my own amusement at her anxiety over Tom. I knew my feeling was akin to what hers had been. Sitting there, my fingers sliding over the keys, I tried to analyse it and came to the conclusion that it was more pride than love which made a woman resent the interest of her man in some other woman. She dislikes knowing that some other woman can interest him, even though she is herself so little fond of him, that she does not trouble to hold Rita is fond of Tom, whereas Jonathan is simply the man I'm going to marry. But she had acted similarly under similar circumstances.

All cut out after the same pattern, with only the slightest of variations.

Finally Rita and Tom left. Rita and Else kissed each other as enthusiastically and as sweetly as if Rita hadn't wanted to wreck Else's wellness less than two hours before.

Jonathan, with a light peck on my cheek, departed soon after.

I let him go as coolly as if he had been the most casual acquaintance.

Yet an hour before I had been vexed because he made the society of another girl too evident pleasure.

"Jonathan's a dear—I'm so glad you're going into such safe embrace. As I turned from seeing Jonathan away, Mama put her arms around me.

"It gives me such a feeling of security," she continued.

I couldn't help thinking, as I stood there unresponsive to her embrace of the money she had borrowed from Jonathan, and the price of her back at her oddly, I wondered if he knew. He seemed about to speak and then turned and walked out of the room.

I followed him shortly. The period of family confidences seemed to have been in the long past. When the four of us were together, which was seldom, we started into the fire or out of the windows in strained silence or buried our faces in books and magazines.

I undressed slowly. Then, my dressing gown wrapped around me, I opened the window facing the park and looked out into the crisp night air toward a certain turn in the walk that had come to have a meaningfulness to me. It seemed, as my eyes accustomed themselves to the darkness, that the outlines began to take on a sense of familiarity.

Then suddenly I faced about. The knob of my dressing room door had turned!

Don't let lunch put you to sleep

DON'T let too much hot, heavy food in the middle of the day make you lopy and drowsy by mid-afternoon.

Keep keen with Kellogg's. Enjoy a bowl of crunchy-crisp Kellogg's Corn Flakes with cool milk or cream and sliced bananas or other fruit.

It certainly hits the spot. Delicious and satisfying. And it's rich in energy that's quickly digested. Leaves you feeling fresh and keen all afternoon.

That's why Kellogg's are America's favorite breakfast treat. So good—and good for you. And more and more busy workers are "changing to crispness" at lunch-time.

At home or abroad—in your own dining-room or at your favorite restaurant—remember Kellogg's. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

LOST HOPE — BUT INDIGESTION ENDED

By English Specialist's Formula

"It is almost beyond belief," writes a Nottingham doctor, "that I had suffered for eight years with acute indigestion, that for a paltry sum I had rid myself of such a terrible and painful complaint."

It was the formula of a London, England, Stomach Specialist, who has been studying and treating stomach ills for many years, that led to this remarkable recovery—a formula that is being used with great success in many English hospitals.

This formula, recently made available to Canadians following the attainment of huge sales in England, is known as Maclean Brand Stomach Powder. Sufferers from Acidity, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Heartburn, Flatulence, Gastritis and stomach troubles generally, will find this powder a great help in ending pain and distress.

Ask your druggist for Maclean Brand Stomach Powder. It is sold in bottles (powder or tablets), at 75¢, but never loose. To get the genuine, look for the signature, Alex. C. Maclean. Sole Canadian distributors, Rigo Agencies, Toronto.

Annual Meeting OF THE SHAREHOLDERS OF THE IMPERIAL SILVER BLACK FOX CO., LTD.

If that is possible," she said. "Belgium has cast in her lot with France and is entirely in sympathy with her demand for security against aggression. We now know that Germany is rearming. There's no doubt about it."

Other recent arrivals were Senovias Carmen and Pilar Primo de Rivera, daughters of the late Spanish dictator. Their main purpose in coming here was to see Niagara Falls. They are ardent Fascists and wear the gold and diamond studded arrows of the Spanish organization. Their brother, the Marquis de Estella, is the leader of the Fascist group in Spain. He plans to visit America soon.

"Chaperones are no longer necessary for young women in Spain. We can do so wherever we please and like it," they remarked.
