It follows: "I am taking the liberty of writing you. A few days ago I had your son, Allan, and one of his Canadian pals to tea and I am pleased to tell you that he was looking grand and says he feels very well. He is in Glasgow for a few days holiday, and soon will be enjoying himself all and we hope next time he comes to Glasgow that he will give us a call. There are a great many Canadians in Glasgow, and they are very fond of you and goodness knows how the poor lads would pass the time. Let's hope this awful war finishes quite soon and let all the lads get back home to their own homes and I am sure that they will all wish the same. Trusting this finds you well, sincerely Mrs. Carslaw."

CRISIS SEEN IN NURSING SERVICE

Steps Being Taken By Canadian Nurses Association And Provincial Organizations To Cope With Problem.

MONTREAL, Feb. 3.—Appointment of Miss Kathleen W. Ellis, Reg. N. B.Sc., as emergency nursing adviser to the Canadian Nurses Association is announced from the National Office in Montreal.

Miss Ellis graduated from Johns Hopkins Hospital School for Nurses, Baltimore, and later from Columbia University, New York. She is now Professor of Nursing at the University of Saskatchewan and Registrar of the Saskatchewan Registered Nurses Association and has been released temporarily to carry out a program outlined in recommendations approved by the Canadian Nurses Association and designed to meet the wartime crisis in nursing service which has developed in Canada. As a former Director of Nursing at the Vancouver General Hospital and the Winnipeg General Hospital, Miss Ellis has a practical knowledge of hospital problems and community needs. A course in public health nursing taken at Bedford College, London University, and the Royal College of Nursing, London, England, gives her an understanding of the special requirements in public health, a field in which many nurses are now needed.

The impending crisis in nursing service is being met by a shortage of specially qualified nurses to fill positions of responsibility in hospitals, schools of nursing and in the public health field. Many specially skilled nurses are now on active service in military hospitals overseas and in Canada. One of the most important needs is to assure that selected nurses shall be prepared to take their places, therefore a recommendation dealing with post-graduate courses is regarded as the most urgent of several formulated to meet the crisis.

It is hoped that there will be large enrolments for post-graduate courses in universities next fall and that authorities in recognizing schools will take immediate steps to select nurses to take special courses in administration, teaching or public health work. Such courses are now available at seven Canadian universities.

Hospitals and alumnae associations are urged to consider the possibility of providing bursaries and loans for promising nurses.

Interviewed at the National Office of the Canadian Nurses Association at Montreal where she is initiating her work as emergency nursing adviser and preparing her itinerary for her forthcoming visits, Miss Ellis stressed the fact that it would be "a serious matter for the public as well as for our profession if the standards of nursing are allowed to be endangered." "The war," she continued, "has emphasized the value of advanced education in nursing since so many specially prepared nurses have been selected for service overseas. This one fact alone would justify the long and difficult struggle to raise nursing standards."

The recommendations formulated by the Canadian Nurses Association cover the following points:

More use of post-graduate courses offered in universities by the enrollment of larger numbers of eventually selected nurses. The development of additional post-graduate courses to provide new technical skills as the need for these arises; Improved conditions to make the profession more attractive to young women to whom nursing appeals as a patriotic service with unlimited opportunities that will continue after the present crisis is over. Some improvements suggested touch on shorter hours of duty and more desirable living conditions.

Better professional status and higher remuneration for general duty nurses in hospitals; Extension of education within hospitals and organizations, to improve the clinical teaching of less able students; and the development of special courses to meet emergency needs.

The establishment of a central preliminary school for nurses in certain key positions.

In reference to post-graduate courses, Miss Ellis pointed out the directors in schools of nursing are asked to assist selected nurses to make the necessary financial arrangements for such study. In addition to bursaries and loans, in-
