No furnace drudgery in the Bison

The most exasperating mystery a man can have is a cranky furnace. The dirt and soot, the ash sifting and draft work of many heaters, make life a burden. With the new "Bison" hot water heater, there are no worries. Its drafts are so simple a child can understand them, the shaking down apparatus is operated with the slightest effort, shaking down and sifting in one operation. It is a clean, simple, economical heater, perfectly safe, as it burns its own gas no matter how the drafts are set. Write to H. R. IVES Co., Limited, Montreal, for an interesting booklet which fully describes it.

By actual observation with transit instrument and chronometer, I have proved the Regina Watch a fine timekeeper. Every one we sell is warranted by us and by many jewellers in Canada, also for 3 years from date of purchase a written guarantee given.

RADIANT WOMANHOOD.

The glory and satisfaction of beautiful womanhood can be known only to those possessing the unlimited advantages of health. No weak woman can be happy or enjoy the pleasures of life. Pallid cheeks, sunken eyes, exhausted nerves, all tell of a terrible struggle to keep up. What the weak woman needs is Ferruzzer, it renews, restores and vitalizes instantly—it's a "woman's remedy" that's why.

Ferruzzer makes women strong, plump and beautiful because it contains lots of nutrient, the kind that forms muscle, sinew, bone and nerve. Vitalizing blood courses through the body, making delight, and giving energy, spirit, true womanly strength. Fifty cents buys a box of Ferruzzer in any drug store.

Disinfecting

"Yes, in Hillsborough," said Hope, "and there were doctors and lawyers and college students and I don't know who all in the match."

"Most remarkable!" said David Brower.

"Tree-men!" exclaimed Uncle Eb. "I heard about it over at the mills today," said Tip Taylor.

"Merec, crossing herself, exclaimed Grandma Blawett, crossing herself.

Elizabeth Brower was unable to stem this tide of enthusiasm. I had tried to stop it, but instantly it had gone beyond my control. If I could be hurt by prairie the mischief had been done.

"It's very nice, indeed," said she soberly. "I do hope it won't make him conceited. He should remember that people do not always mean what they say."

"He's too sensible for that, mother," said David.

"Shucks!" said Uncle Eb. "He ain't no fool if he is a good speller—not by a jum sight!"

"Tip," said David, "you'll find a box in the sleigh 'at come by express. I wish yeh'd 'at git it."

We all stood looking while Tip brought it in and pried off the top boards with a hatchet.

"Careful, now!" Uncle Eb cautioned him. "Might spill sumthin'."

The top off, Uncle Eb removed a layer of pasteboard. Then he pulled out that was a package wrapped and tied. Something was written on it. He held it up and tried to read the writing.

"Can't see without my spectacles," he said, handing it to me.

"For Hope," I read as I passed it to her.

"Hoorny!" said Uncle Eb as he lifted another and the last package from the box.

"For Mrs. Brower," were the words I read upon that one.

The strings were cut, the wrappers torn away, and two big rolls of silken silk loosened their coils on the table. Hope uttered a cry of delight. A murmur of surprise and admiration passed from one to another. Elizabeth lifted a rustling fold and held it to the lamplight. We passed our hands over the smooth sheen of the silk.

"Waal, I swan!" said Uncle Eb. "Jes' like a kitten's ear!"

"Eggzac'ly!" said David Brower. Elizabeth lifted the silk and let it flow to her feet. Then for a little she looked down, draping it to her skirt and moving her foot to make the silk rustle. For the moment she was young again.

"David," she said, still looking at the glory of glossy black that covered her plain dress.

"Well, mother," he answered. "Was you fool enough t' go'n buy this stuff fer me?"

"No, mother; it come from New York city," he said.

"From New York city?" was the exclamation of all.

Elizabeth Brower looked thoughtfully at her husband.

"Clear from New York city?" she repeated.

"From New York city," said he.

"Waal, of all things!" said Uncle Eb, looking over his spectacles from one to another.

"It's from that Livingston boy," said Mrs. Brower. "I've heard he's the son of a rich man."

"Fraid he took a great fancy t' Hope," said David.

"Father," said the girl, "you've no right to say that. I'm sure he never cared a stray fer me."

"I don't think we ought to keep it," said Mrs. Brower, looking up thoughtfully.

"Shucks an' shavin's!" said Uncle Eb. "Ye don't know but what I had it sent myself."

Hope went over and put her arms around his neck.

"Did you, Uncle Eb?" she asked.

"Now, you tell me the truth, Uncle Eb."

"Wouldn't say 't I did," he answered, "but I don't want 'a see ye go sendin' it back. Ye dunno who sent it."

"What'll I do with it?" Mrs. Brower asked, laughing in a way that showed a sense of absurdity. "I'd 'a been tickled with it thirty years ago, but now—folks 'ud think I was crazy."

"Never heard such foleldor!" said Uncle Eb. "If ye move t' the village I'll come handy t' go t' meetin' in."

That seemed to be unanswerable and conclusive, at least for the time being, and the silk was laid away. We sat talking until late bedtime. Hope and I telling of our studies and of the many people we had met in Hillsborough.

We hung up our stockings just as we had always done Christmas eve and were up betimes in the morning to find them filled with many simple but delightful things, and one which I treasure to this day—the locket and its picture, of which I had been surreptitiously informed.

At 2 o'clock we had a fine dinner of roast turkey and chicken pie, with plenty of good cider, and the mince pie, of blessed memory, such as only a daughter of New England may dare try to make.
