BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

MRS. LIGHTFOOT FACES TWO

Courage faces odds as though Unaware that it is so. -Old Mother Nature

"My dear," said Reddy Fox to Mrs. Reddy. "I have found out something. I hope it is something good," said Mrs. Reddy. "That depends," said he. He grinned again. "On what?" asked Mrs. Reddy. "On how smart we are," replied Reddy.

"Did you say we?" asked Mrs. Reddy. "Why we?" "Because it will take both of us to get from what I have found something you are going to want when you know what it is," replied Reddy. He grinned again, a provoking sort of grin. "Stop teasing me and tell me what you have found," barked Mrs. Reddy. "I didn't like being teased. Who does?" "I have found where the babies of Mrs. Lightfoot the Deer are hidden," replied Reddy. "But if I will take both of us to get one of them," he added. Mrs. Reddy pricked up her black ears. "Did you see them?" she wanted to know. Reddy shook his head. "No," said he.

"Then how do you know where they are?" demanded Mrs. Reddy. "Mrs. Lightfoot told me," replied Reddy, and the grin on his crafty face was broader than ever. "I don't believe it," retorted Mrs. Reddy. "She wouldn't tell that to any one, not even their own father." This time Reddy chuckled. "My dear, have you never heard that sometimes actions speak more plainly than words?" Then he told her about the fallen tree-top in the Green Forest and how when he had started looking around it Mrs. Lightfoot had driven him away. "You should have seen her," said he. "You wouldn't have thought she was the same person we have known so long, always ready to run. She was a fighting fury. I was lucky to get away from her unhurt. I didn't even know she was about until I started to poke around that tree-top and she dashed out of a thicket at me. Of course, then I knew right away that she had babies hidden there."

TWO - SUITERS

Everyone knows that a hand consisting of two long suits, even when relatively weak in top cards, can turn out to be a powerful offensive weapon, if partner fits either suit. What is not so well known, however, is that the same sort of two-suited hand can be very bad - and out-and-out trap for its holder.

West dealer. East-West vulnerable. Hand diagram showing cards: West (AK62, K7, AKJ, 98, 105) and East (7, Q8, 7652, Q6432, 98, 3642, 103, AKJ, 98, QJ10543, A10983)

The bidding table: West North East South 1 Pass Pass 2 Pass Pass 3NT Pass Pass 4 Pass Pass 5 Pass Pass 6 Pass Pass 7 Pass Pass

South was very unlucky in that he found North short of both hearts and spades. Considering the opposing bidding, however, this fact was not too difficult to foresee. West, vulnerable, had jumped to three notrump over South's two spades, and he certainly had some protection in hearts as well. South's two singletons strongly suggested that North had a great many cards in those minor suits, since neither East nor West had supported each other in diamonds and clubs. Of course, North was wrong in taking the four-spade bid back to five hearts, despite his preference for the latter suit. West opened the diamond king and shifted to a club. East won, and stopped spade ruffing in dummy by returning the heart deuce. Declarer ducked; West won and knocked out the heart queen. After that, the defenders merely had to be careful to keep forcing South in diamonds and clubs as often as possible, and the outcome was that South took only four heart tricks and one diamond - he did not get a single spade trick! The 1100-point penalty was more than adequate compensation to East-West for the game they could have made at three notrump.

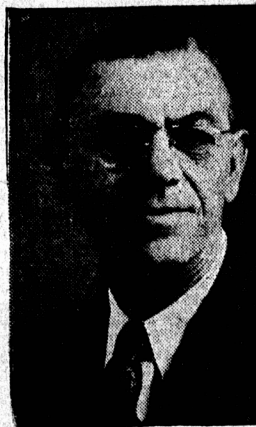

I have found where the babies of Mrs. Lightfoot the Deer are hidden," replied Reddy

"You mean one of us to get out of sight while the other draws Mrs. Lightfoot away from her babies, giving the unseen one a chance?" asked Mrs. Reddy. Reddy nodded. "I think it will work," he said. "You will keep out of sight so that Mrs. Lightfoot won't suspect that there are two of us. I'll go to that tree-top as I did before. She'll dash at me and I'll dodge her and run. She'll come after me. I'll tease her into chasing me until she is so far from that tree-top that you will have time to slip in under it and look for those babies. You know we have caught more than one smart Chuck working together in a similar way."

"It is worth trying," declared Mrs. Reddy and licked her lips. Then the two talked over the plan and decided they would try it the very next day. Now while Mrs. Lightfoot is a very timid person she is also smart. She knew that Reddy Fox had found out her secret and she knew that sooner or later he would come back to try to get one of those babies. So she moved them. Young as they were, they could walk. So she led them to a thicket just a little way from the fallen tree-top. In trying to fool Reddy in a matching of wits she was facing one of the smartest folks in all the Green Forest, and she knew it. Really she was facing two, but she didn't know that then.

The next story: "An Appetite Lost."

H. L. Black, signal engineer, Atlantic Region, Canadian National Railways, Moncton, who has been appointed signal engineer for the entire system at Montreal. Mr. Black began his long career as a signal maintainer at Saint John, N. B. in 1914, and was successively promoted to signal foreman, signal supervisor, superintendent of signals prior to his appointment as signal engineer, Atlantic Region, at Moncton, in 1933. He has been active in a great many large signal projects on the C. N. R., including the installation of the centralized traffic control between Moncton and Halifax, and the automatic block signal system between Saint John and Hampton.
