The school here is closed for the autumn holidays and all the pupils who are able are busy gathering in the potato crop.

The Hall at Sea View was filled with friends of Miss Mildred Blakney on Thursday evening to tender her a shower of presents for marriage. The hall was prettily decorated with flowers and a seat of honor in pink and white adorned the platform. As the strains of Lohengrin Wedding March pealed out the guest of honor was escorted by a premature bride and groom, little Marie Adams and Max Murphy. A gaily decorated basket laden with all kinds of parcels was brought in and refilled several times. The parcels were opened by Lucy Brown and Carrie Adams and accompanying verses were read by Evelyn Donald, Marion Pickering and Lilian McLeod arranged them on the table. These lovely gifts consisted of linen, china glass and silver ware, aluminum and many other household necessities. Miss Blakney in a few well chosen words graciously acknowledged the kindness of all, and all joined in singing "For She's A Jolly Good Fellow." When the gifts had all been admired a dainty lunch was served and the remainder of the evening was spent in dancing. Splendid music was furnished by James Beatrice and May Belle Woodside till a late hour when all departed after wishing the bride to be hearty congratulations.

WARSHIP NAMES

The British Navy keeps tradition alive. Particularly in warship names, many of which are centuries old.

A striking example is the Ark Royal, the great new 23,000-ton aircraft-carrier which will be ready for service in the summer. She had a namesake in the fleet which opposed the Spanish Armada. The original Ark Royal, a vessel of 800 tons launched in 1587, was Lord Howard of Effingham's flagship.

Lord Howard, recorded his admiration of her. He thought her likely to bear the name. Carefully preserved she still flies the flag of the Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth. Rodney, the fourth since 1781, takes her name from Admiral Lord Rodney, who gained a famous victory in 1782 off Dominica over the French fleet.
