EMPIRE DELEGATES AFFIRM ALLEGIANCE; GREAT DAY DAWNS

Thousands Line Processional Route All Night To Secure Vantage Point In Empire Pageant.

(By Pat Ussher) (Canadian Press Staff Writer) (C. P. Cable, By Guardian's Special Wire) LONDON, May 12 — (Wednesday) — Fog descended on London as Big Ben's voice boomed midnight and Coronation Day opened with crowds already lining up to watch the pageant of Empire as the King and Queen go to ancient Westminster Abbey to be dedicated to the Empire's service.

COUN. R. C. CHANDLER Chairman of Coronation Arrangements Committee

Determined to see the pageant even though without tickets to the capacious stands, humble folks camped on the curbs, using lampposts as supports.

By 10 o'clock last night, the hour when the lights were turned out in the Royal apartments in Buckingham Palace, the entire procession route along Hyde Park was occupied by people. Still they came. They flocked to other points on the circuitous route and jammed streets.

As King George and Queen Elizabeth sought sleep in preparation for their hours-long duties, gay parties continued into the morning in night clubs, hotels and private homes.

AND STILL THEY COME A final, vast inflow of people to the West End continued — throngs from the suburbs and the counties — as gloomy weather prospects were issued.

Late last night the official forecast said: "Cloudy and cool with occasional rain." No rain fell on the celebrating crowds during the night but forecasters held out little hope it would remain dry throughout the day which will see, authorities estimated, 6,000,000 people jammed along the route that goes from Buckingham Palace along the Mall and Whitehall to the Abbey and returns by way of Bridge Street, Victoria Embankment, Northumberland Avenue, Pall Mall, St. James Street, Piccadilly, Regent Street, Oxford Street, the East Carriage Road and Constitution Hill to the Palace.

Abney Towers Silhouetted

Throngs in the vicinity of Parliament Square saw the twin towers of the ancient Abbey in ghostly silhouette against grey skies as the time approached for another historic event within its storied walls.
Police began closing off the procession route in an effort to restore order in the greatest traffic jam in London's history. The crowds arrived for their long vigil bearing periscopes, lunchkits, guitars, accordions, flasks, mattresses.
Nelson's column was entirely surrounded by swarming humanity. Piccadilly Circus was jammed. Police patrolled the empty stands ordering out any unauthorized persons who had gained access.

Army Of Newspapermen Set To Flash News Of Ceremony

LONDON, May 12—(Wednesday) — (CP)—Havas—Hot coffee and sandwiches became standard diet early today as the highly organized international army of 4,000 newspaper correspondents sought to "clear all wires" for the coronation ceremony.
As the "zero hour" approached newspapermen, photographers and newsreel men reviewed their plans, mapped months in advance.
Though attempting the most hazardous flight, the United States fliers, Dick Merrill and Jack Lambie, were but of a few of the crack aces waiting to race coronation newsreel pictures to foreign shores.
The cameramen who will remain closeted in their Abbey booths for four hours have a no less strenuous job before them.
James A. Mollison, veteran transatlantic flier, was ready to fly the newsreel shots — the first ever filmed of a coronation — to Glasgow, with a fleet of 200 fast trucks waiting to speed the editions throughout the country.
Italian newspapermen were conspicuously absent, having deserted the capital a few hours after Premier Mussolini's recall order last Saturday.
All cable and wireless circuits linking London with the four corners of the world were clogged with copy as dawn approached.
Cable, telegraph and telephone offices put on double, triple and then quadruple shifts, but still found themselves deluged.
Telephone circuits were kept open to North America and the continent. The ceremony was worldwide in interest, with people all over the globe demanding news as eagerly as King George VI's 400,000,000 subjects.
Five thousand newsboys were ready in London to sell "Coronation extras", with a fleet of 200

Hindenburg Explosion At The Prince Edward

Pictures Being Rushed By Air From Saint John Thur.

The Prince Edward Theatre takes pleasure in announcing that pictures of the great Hindenburg Explosion, when the pride of Germany's great air fleet was utterly destroyed in practically a split second, will be shown for the last three days of the week, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.
It will, however, be impossible to show these pictures on Thursday afternoon since they are at present playing in Saint John and will be rushed from there to Charlottetown by plane in order to catch the first show Thursday evening.
The Prince Edward's feature attraction, which starts today is "Wings of the Morning" which features Annabella, Henry Fonda, and John McCormick. L-400.
