GREATER INTEREST NEEDED.

C. E. Mackenzie During the last few weeks since the meeting of the Dairymen's Association of P. E. Island, I have been thinking and puzzling about the attitude of the present day farmer.

It seems that he is either getting his fill of agricultural information from his farm paper or has so filled his mind with wisdom at institute meetings that any further knowledge on the subject would be needless, for he seldom or never attends any of these educational gatherings.

Of course there are exceptions to this rule, but generally speaking, farmers do not embrace all their opportunities for the getting of information vital to their interests and ultimately to their success.

Daily routine of chores have become an exacting duty and the busy man with little or no help must needs stick closely to the farm.

But the government, or I may say we (the people) are paying large salaries to investigate and experiment along agricultural lines and we have men of superior talent, as it were, in the whole business of which the farmer is only one member of the company and yet they cannot get away from home once a year to hear what is new and get in touch with these men. It is true that the farm and daily papers report the thoughts of the speakers, but we seldom get a full verbatim report of any one address and the farmer who cannot leave home to attend a dairymen's convention is almost a prisoner within walls he himself has built by the habit of stay-at-home and his lack of companionship with his fellows.

Farming can never be the profession of high calling if it should be if the farmer is tied to the plow handles or the dairy stables.

We must needs meet and exchange views with men in the other walks of life, for when farmer and investigator meet on common ground, ideas are sure to be exchanged that will help everybody. Not long ago I read an article where the author used the following sentence which I think is quite suitable to this article. "It is sad indeed that farmers and dairymen are bound at home or else are clothed in the cloak of social isolation and content that they cannot meet occasionally to worship together at the shrines of the dairy cow."

The above quotation to my mind filled the bill in regard to our dairymen's convention. We had with us this year Mr. F. A. Rudlick, chief of the division as well as W. A. Mackay of Nova Scotia and the addresses of these two men could have been profitably used by each and all of our fourteen thousand farmers, yet with attractions like Mr. Rudlick and Mr. Mackay the meeting failed to draw men out.

The weather of course was bad and the farmer had chores to do at home, hence a poorly attended meeting. Whatever the cause may be, there is not the enthusiasm among farmers that the times demand. We need a revival in farming circles and an evangelist to instill some enthusiasm into the rural people and rekindle their agricultural faith.

In the past only the most desperate circumstances have brought about great changes in agriculture. The majority of changes have been gradual and the high standard to which it should properly belong, based there is no excuse for indifference to things that are sure to add much to our products and their quality.

It is the standing pool and separation not contact that leads to nearly all trouble between the organized combines, trusts and the farmer.

They look upon each other as strangers and even as enemies and always will until the farmer gets it into his mind that he must meet and unite with his brother farmer in order to elevate his profession to the high standard to which it should properly belong.

MACDONALD'S CUT BRIER

MACDONALD'S "BRIER" has become a Canadian institution. Smoked by the men who made history. In the bush, on the trail, in mining camps, prospectors' huts, factory yards, on trains, steamships, in the luxurious homes and downtown clubs of our Canadian cities—Macdonald's has always been recognized as the smoke.

MACDONALD'S CUT "BRIER"—the same tobacco but in new form—maintains every Macdonald tradition since 1858, and gives to smokers—more tobacco for the money.

SPECIALIZE

C. E. McKenzie

The question "Do you specialize?" has often been asked the farmer by visitors. We should always have some special line that we give more attention to than the usual branches of our work. I have always noticed that the farmer that pays particular attention to one branch of his work generally makes a success of that line. Do not take a fancy to one branch and ride the hobby to death but in conjunction with the regular work always have the special line from which you are sure to receive the greater part of your revenue.

In proof of the above assertion one has only to ask men who are considered successful in their communities and their answer will always be "I have a special line."

They have discovered a crop or class of live stock which they can produce to advantage, and from directing their energies in that direction profits have accrued and success has been attained.

Generally speaking the successful and progressive farmer has obtained his standing through hard work and shrewd economy. The unsuccessful are too often indifferent to the ideas of his more fortunate neighbors. Here is an evidence of that too independent spirit of the farmer, he hesitates to adopt methods that his neighbor has proved successful and remunerative. It is not time brother farmer that we broaden out, have the wider vision, meet, exchange views, then where one has made a success of any line learn all we can from his experience, and profit by it, giving in exchange ideas that have proved to be successful with you, thus not only improving your own holding but helping to raise the standard of the whole community and the products produced by its people.

quality we will be sure to make a success of our calling. We call that we have not all the same advantages or even things but if each would choose the "main line" as I might call it, and specialize along that we are sure to attain a fair measure of success. Upon a recent trip in Queens county one farmer told the writer that his milk cheques for the year 1920 were almost $3200 while another with perhaps a larger herd had made almost $3,000. On these farms dairying was specialized but quite a large revenue was made on the farms from hogs while the latter specialized in poultry as a side line with a fair measure of success. Another successful farmer that I met on this trip specialized on beef and had a bunch of steers almost ready for the butcher that would bring him in almost $1800.00; this would be repeated in about six months.

What Every Husband Knows.

we have the majority of them in one container where they may be closely watched, hence the need of specialization. BOUT CALLED OFF.
