Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife (Continued from Page 2) as well to stand corrected. I may say that as recently as last evening we had one of these "doings."

Jeanie happening in, searched quietly—but fruitlessly; Karolyn too, a ghost of a smile flickering. I sent Polly here or there, giving concerned directions and at last we found it. Where? Hanging on a post of the old bed, in a very one of all he wanted.

The fencing at Alderley began today, May 2, when the afternoon brought sunlight and clearing—if cold skies Jamie was ready to return home with Bob after dinner.

This cold day was not meant for house cleaning. Polly and I seem to have dawdled the most of it away. I heard the stove being polished vigorously this afternoon and there was wood taken to the box.

James is missing. I hear in the quiet a plaintive he-a-a and I see a light from the shed. James will have interesting news for us, think, when he comes from his final round. It's a cold night this for a small new lambkin to come to the world.

Until tomorrow. Diary. Goodnight.

Look your Sunday best in a picture-pretty suit this Spring! So soft and feminine, so lovely with your furs... see our sparkling collection today.
