Of the thousands upon thousands of men and women who know the health value of the daily dash of ENO in a glass of water, none is more appreciative than the travelling man.

ENO'S "Fruit Salt" cleanses the inner system gently and safely and keeps the stomach sweet . . . thus offsetting the effects of constant change of climate, food and water.

At your druggist's . . . but remember, —ONLY ENO CAN GIVE ENO RESULTS.

The Wife-Ship Woman

CHAPTER II

France Sends More Rubbish.

After leaving the hills and bluffs, I experienced that feeling which always came to me when descending the river alone; that is, that the river was sentient and was pursuing me. Foolish no doubt, yet impelling enough to make me swing my head frequently in staring back over the desolate flood and its burden of drift. I never experienced any bizarre sensation in fighting my up-stream. I sharply missed the companionship of Damien the Fox, a great scamp yet prince of woodsmen. Once I would have sworn a piece of drift suddenly darted behind a tangled mass of forest trees, as if propelled by human agency.

During my trip across Maurepas and for half the distance on Pontchartrain I might have been the last man in the world; for aside from wild fowl and the water life there was nothing to attract my attention. Then my isolation was shattered by the sight of a canoe coming toward me from the direction of Bayou St. Jean. As it drew nearer I decided its sole occupant was a voyager from the North. He, too, was much interested in me, for he rested his paddle and shading his eyes scrutinized me closely.

I also rested and waited for him to finish his study. Suddenly he drove his paddle over the hide and came toward me swiftly. I slid the muzzle of my musket over the side and called on him to halt. Abrupt approaches in the Louisiana wilderness beckoned hostility, or great friendship and this shaggy fellow was unknown to me as yet.

"That is near enough," I called, "Who are you?"

"Foolish! How proud he is! The white Indian will not greet the red!"

The merry insolence of his voice could not be disguised. With a thoroughly amiable grin I dropped the musket between my feet and held up empty hands. He shot his lighter craft alongside and would have asked me had I not held both his hands.

"Joe Labrador!" I exclaimed. "I thought you to be taking a wife to Montreal. Who would have thought of seeing you on Pontchartrain?"

"And you, Monsieur Brampton, the White Indian! My heart was broken when I found Yvonne had married a miserable, spending fellow, who does nothing for the governor. I came here to bury my heart. Little birds tell me France is to send over many beautiful women like virgins. And to find you here, in monsieur's back door, as one might say!"

"I am making a short cut—"

"Diablo! But you are a brave man!"

"Brave? How so? I know the river, and the forest and the Indians."

"Ah, but Sieur de Bienville? I, your friend, wish by all the saints that you knew him! After you went up the river the last time 40 of his excellency's soldiers deserted, running away to Carolina. And he vowed he would hang you if he ever caught you, for enticing them away."

This was disturbing news. I could trust Joe Labrador, old companion in many a venture, to speak naught but the truth. Then I became angry, as a man will who is wrongfully accused. There was much Bienville could have said to me for I might even have seduced his soldiers from their allegiance had it appealed to me as being feasible. So I became incensed now I was charged with something I was innocent of—doubly resentful because I had not had the wit to think of it.

Labrador mistook my silence for hesitation and earnestly said:

"You must turn back at once before any of Monsieur du Prat's people see and recognize you. I will go with you as far as Fort Rosalie, perhaps farther. I will forget my new wife. I will go beyond Chartres. Bah! there will be women enough for all of us. Sieur de Bienville is in a temper. Now France and Spain have had a peace-smoke he is like a bear with a sore head. For years he has begged to have the seat of government changed to la Nouvelle Orleans."

An Old Remedy
that never loses favor. Minard's Liniment has been in use for fifty years. A sure test of quality.
