YVONNE A STAR

Mademoiselle! mademoiselle! Mademoiselle!

The words blinked at Yvonne nightly now as she approached the theatre, for Drake had made her a star. Her return to the company of "Fast and Furious" had boosted the box-office receipts overnight.

The day after renewing her contract with Drake she had called on Mrs. Ogden. After their greetings were over, Yvonne explained what she had done. Mrs. Ogden stared at her. "You plucky little devil!" she said at last admiringly.

"Yes, said Yvonne, "and it will be easier this time, for while I mean to continue simply Mademoiselle on the program, I am to be known as Mlle. Perreault privately. I want you to help me find a small apartment, and find Lottie again for me. I don't want any one to know that I am Mrs. Ross of course, and the few of you who do know can keep the secret, I am sure. But this time I mean to go out a little, and not keep myself the way I did before."

"How wise you are!" Edith said. "Of course I'll help you find an apartment, and as for Lottie, she came back to me, but she'll go to you again in a minute. And you need clothes too, don't you?" "Badly; can you go shopping with me all this week?" "Of course I can. Why waste time? Let's start now."

Yvonne's new salary permitted her to spend money freely. She had no thought beyond the next six months, so she bought lovely clothes, decorated her apartment, and surrounded herself with luxury. Within two weeks after she had bade her husband farewell she was one of the smartest women in any well-dressed gathering. She had natural taste, and that, with her fresh young beauty, tinged with sadness, gave her distinction.

In her apartment this love of fine things expressed itself in simplicity and harmony of furnishings and hangings that gave Yvonne a charming background.

EVERYTHIN EXCEPT

"Now we are ready for society with a capital S," Mrs. Ogden observed when the last picture was in place. "Truly Yvonne, with your charm and these perfect rooms, and your stunning clothes, you can have anything in the world you want."

"Everything except what I want most," Yvonne said sadly.

"And what is that?" Mrs. Ogden asked, flickering the ash from her cigarette toward the open fire which burned in the apartment living room.

"My husband—Richard," Yvonne answered, lingering over the words as though she loved them.

"You poor child—well, you will get over that in time."

"But I don't want to get over it," Yvonne protested. "I love loving Richard."

"Will you tell him at the end of this six months?" Mrs. Ogden asked. "I don't know," Yvonne rose and went restlessly to the window. "It is still too far away for me to decide. I mailed letters to my grandfather last week, asking him to mail them back to Richard. He won't understand, but he trusts me and will do as I ask."

Mrs. Ogden hesitated. "Do you

PINKHAM'S COMPOUND IS WONDERFUL

know, by any chance," she asked at last. "What Richard is doing?" "Something in her tone made Yvonne turn quickly. "What is Richard doing?" she asked. "He's living at the club—" "I knew that."

"And he and Bob West are going everywhere together. Teas, dinners, dances, theatres, a regular orgy of going. Richard has been buried so long he can't seem to get enough amusement now."

"Does he see Miss Lovelace?" Yvonne asked in a strained voice. "I suppose so; she's a pal of Bob West, you know."

"If Richard wants her, I'll give him his freedom," Yvonne said slowly. "Don't be silly, child. I wasn't trying to make you jealous. I don't suppose Richard is seeing any more of Anne than he does of the other girls in that crowd. But I was thinking that sooner or later Bob would take Richard to see you dance. They may even come behind the scenes—men of that type often do, you know—and in that case you might have an awkward time of it."

"Do you think there is any possible chance of Richard's knowing me?" Mrs. Ogden looked critically at the girl. "No, I don't know, particularly since you've had your hair bobbed. Yvonne's hair, cut short, curled softly all over her head. She was wearing a slim youthful afternoon frock, with a brief full skirt. She looked scarcely more than 16, and was as properly and smartly dressed as a debutante.

"No," Mrs. Ogden shook her head. "I don't believe I would know you myself, if I had seen you only in your peasant costume."

From that time on, Yvonne would glance rapidly at the audience, wondering if Richard might indeed be there watching her. One night she fancied she saw him and danced with more abandon than ever before. She was widely applauded, but although she hovered about the wings, hoping to catch a glimpse of Richard that would assure her, she did not see him.

GOSSIP AT TEA

Mrs. Ogden gave a tea for her. Some of the women present Yvonne knew by sight. She wondered whether Anne Lovelace would make her appearance, but Anne did not come. As the guests were leaving Yvonne caught a inkling of the reason for Anne's absence.

"Anne has the thickest kind of case on Dick Ross, you know," one of the women said, as he made up her lips in the dressing room.

"That's no news," observed another. "Does the strait-laced Dick reciprocate this time?" asked another.

"Hard to tell. They say his wife has gone back to France and Richard is cutting all kinds of capers while she is away."

"She'd better come back soon, if she wants to keep her little Dicky bird," said the first speaker. "I've seen Anne before. She's a fast worker—and I saw her with Dick at the Plaza this noon, heads together over the lunch table, probably making plans for this afternoon."

Yvonne turned away sickened by this gossip. It might mean nothing at all, and again it might mean that Richard was to be lost to her forever.

She refused a supper invitation that night and went back alone to her apartment. She sat before the fire, sipping milk and staring at the dying flames.

"I must think this through," she told herself. "I cannot go on, being weakened and maddened by jealousy every time I hear Richard's name mentioned."

She tried to survey all the facts impartially. But all that resulted from her self-examination was the deep conviction that never again could she be patient Griselda to Richard the scientist. She must interest and arouse Richard the man, she would no longer delay her talent. This conclusion reached, she stretched and yawned and felt comforted. Her days of sweeping and dusting and dish-washing were past.

Several days later Mrs. Ogden rushed into the apartment as Yvonne was dressing for a matinee.

"My dear, my dear, do you know who saw you dance last night?"

"Richard," Yvonne stated the name calmly, though she turned a little pale.

"Yes. Bob took him and they are raving about you. I saw them both just now at lunch. Bob always has been crazy about your dancing, you know, and that funny Tommy Markham was there, too. The three of them were killing, the way they talked."

"Richard was pleased?" "He wasn't as vocal about it as the others, but I think he was pleased just the same. He said you were different from any dancer he had ever seen and he intends to see you again."

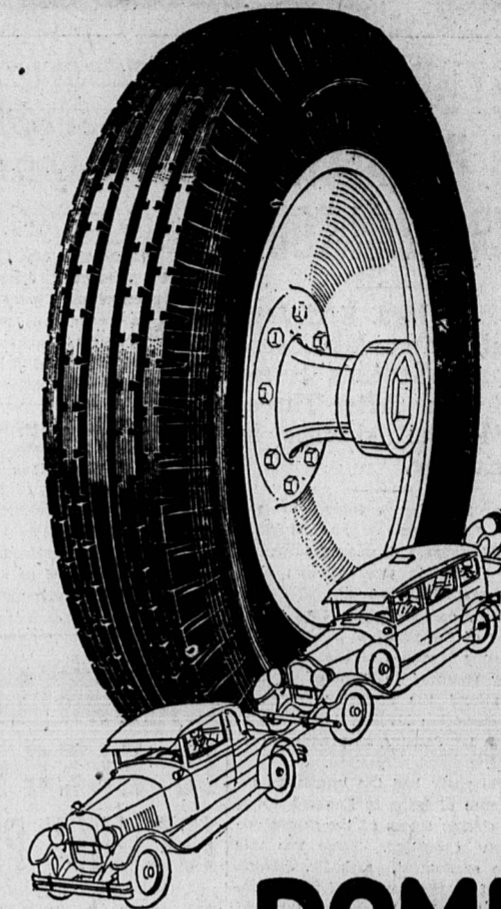

"Do you think there is any chance of his having suspected anything?" "Not a thing. Bob West swears he is going to get you to come to a party where he can meet you, and Richard said he would like to meet you, too."

Yvonne smiled. "I had a note from

THE NEW DOMINION

ROYAL CORD

DOMINION TIRE builders foresaw the trend in motor car development. They realized that responsive motors, 4-wheel brakes, sensitive steering control, modern spring suspension and skilfully engineered balance demanded a specially designed tire to give all the comfort and flexibility of which the modern car is capable.

In the New Royal Cord they have perfected the tire of today for the car of today. It is not just the old Royal Cord with a new tread. It is an entirely new tire through and through.

Its main changes are dictated by engineering reasons. It is new in shape, new in construction. It has strength where 1929 motoring conditions demand it.

Its massive carcass is scientifically built up of web cord with thick cushions of rubber in between.

Its tread is thick and deep-cut to give extra non-skid mileage. Designed to grip the road across the full tread surface.

Buttressed sidewalls guard against curb and rut wear and give further strength to the rugged carcass.

For safety and long mileage, for the job your 1929 car has to do, the New Royal Cord is the one tire for you.

The New Dominion "ENDURANCE"

Here is a tire combining sound engineering, finest workmanship and sterling materials at a price considerably below the average. A splendid tire for light cars.

The Dominion Royal Master—a luxury tire for fine cars. The finest tire the world has ever known.

Dominion Heavy Service Tire—a super tire for trucks and buses.

Mr. West this morning asking if he might call.

"Are you going to see him?" Yvonne shook her head. "I wouldn't dare. He has met me too, you know, I cooked a dinner for him one time."

"Mark my words," said Mrs. Ogden. "Sooner or later you are going to meet that husband of yours face to face."

"When I do," Yvonne answered, with a note of bitterness in her voice. "When I do, he will fall to see me, because of Miss Lovelace."

PROTECT THE CHILD FROM TUBERCULOSIS

Tuberculosis continues to be one of the major diseases. It shows a decrease, but nevertheless, it still accounts for a tremendous number of deaths. Because it is a chronic disease, its victims suffer for years; during which time their earning powers are reduced; consequently, tuberculosis is one of the greatest causes of poverty. Also, because a large percentage of tuberculosis deaths occur during early adult life, it is the reason why many children are left motherless or fatherless.

There is one particular point in connection with this disease to which we wish to draw the attention of our readers. This, that children are most susceptible to tuberculosis.

Without in any way minimizing the dangers of the spread of tuberculosis in other ways, it should be understood by all that it is the repeated exposure to large doses of infection that is the real practical danger.

Living in the home with a tuberculous person, who is ignorant of the fact that he is suffering from the disease, or who, knowing that he has the disease, is careless, it is almost certain that repeated heavy doses of infection will be passed to others in the home.

The young child living in the home with a careless or ignorant tuberculous person is almost surely marked as a victim of this disease. Infection received in childhood is frequently responsible for the development of the disease in later life.

If tuberculosis is to be stamped out, it is necessary that more care be taken to protect young children. This means that adults must take more precautions since children cannot take care of themselves. Because it is most frequently in the home that tuberculosis is spread, the necessity for care in the home is apparent. To protect the children, adults must preserve their own health, and must practice living in such a manner that they do not endanger their children.

No one would willingly expose his child to disease, but where there is spitting, uncovered coughing and sneezing, and the use of common drinking-cups in the home, the child in that home is not being given a fair chance to escape disease. In such a home, if there is a case of tuberculosis, the child will most certainly contract this disease.

Insidious Eye Strain

We use this adjective advisedly. Sufferers from Eye Strain may have perfect vision and therefore do not suspect the presence of any evil defect. The motive power of the entire human organism is Nerve Energy. Normal eyes, it is computed utilize about 20% of this Nerve Energy, but when Eye Strain is present, a much larger proportion is required. Hence defective eyes through their consumption of an excessive amount of Nerve Energy may seriously affect the functioning of other organs of the body and produce ill health.
