Tractor Is Army's Most Useful Tool In North

By Charles Lynch
CHURCHILL, Man., May 16—(Reuters) — Three years' research into problems of Arctic warfare has taught Canadian, United States and British soldiers that the tractor or is an army's most useful item of equipment in the north.

Heavy tractors with broad caterpillar treads have been familiar in the north woods for two decades, and it was lumbermen who also pioneered the tractor train, now destined to become the mainstay of any Arctic military force.

Tests on tractor-train operation have been going on at Churchill through the winter, and operations ranging up to 400 miles from camp were carried out without a serious hitch.

The average train comprises the tractor, two cargo sleds and a "wannagan." The "wannagan" is a Canadian contribution, and the main secret of long-range operations. It is bunkhouse on runners which can be converted into a mobile workshop.

Three or more trains travelling close together are called a "swing." They make surprisingly good time through bush or over the barrens, and can move almost any northern terrain in winter.

Maps of the Canadian north were based largely on guesswork — which gives some comfort to Canadian military officials since it means that any maps in the hands of potential enemies are highly misleading. The north now is being recharted from the air, and for obvious reasons the new maps will be withheld from publication for a while.

Meantime, tractor-train operators rely on what the army calls "local knowledge," usually a native guide who has trapped furs in the area.

Each "swing" carries a navigator to establish positions with sextant, compass and dead reckoning. The first "swing" on the final exercise required 46 days for an

14,000 Women In Royal Air Force

BY KAY REX
OTTAWA, May 16 — (CP) — At least 14,000 women are wearing the trim blue uniforms of Britain's Royal Air Force, and the head of the Women's Auxiliary to the R.A.F. says this figure will be increased to 26,000.

Tall, smiling Air Commandant Felicity Hyde Hanbury, director of the W.A.A.F. since 1946, stepped from an United States army plane at Rockcliffe Airport today into the Canadian sunshine. The air force head has been touring the United States for the last month, and will return to Washington before travelling back overseas. On this semi-official visit to the Dominion she will meet R.C.A.F. officials in Ottawa and also will visit Trenton, Ont., and Toronto.

Britain's objective in bringing women into the R. A. F. is "to substitute women for men, wherever practicable, throughout the service," she said in an interview. The women are entering the service at the rate of "130 a week," and the program aims at building the women's division to 26,000. At the moment there are 12,000 W. A. A. F.s stationed in Britain and some 4,000 "chiefly in the Middle East and in Germany."

Women play a most active part in the R. A. F. Air Commandant Hanbury said that of the 75 different trades, "approximately 60" are open to the W. A. A. F.

Women entering the R. A. F. must be between the ages of 17 1/2 and 36.

British Aroused By Cases Of Child Cruelty

(By Stuart Underhill, Canadian Press Staff Writer)
LONDON, May 16—(CP)—Public opinion in Britain has been roused by a number of cases in which children have been cruelly treated or neglected by their parents.

The immediate reaction has been agitation to stiffen the penalties now provided by law. Home Secretary James Chuter Ede told the House of Commons, however, that the existing law is adequate. It provides a maximum penalty of six months imprisonment and £25 ($100) fine or two years and £100 fine if a magistrate sends the case to a higher court.

National Disgrace
Ede was answering Earl Winterston, Conservative member for Hesham, who said that the "amount of child cruelty and inadequate penalties are a disgrace to a great nation."

Cases of "Beisen-like" cruelty to children should be punished more severely, he said, and promised he would raise the matter in the Commons again.

Newspaper reports recently have told of children who have been cruelly beaten or otherwise hurt or left untended in filthy conditions for long periods.

Fire Torture
One case which roused the indignation of the London Evening Standard was that of a seven-year-old girl who had been deprived of food and clothing and was burned on various parts of her body. Her mother by adoption was fined £25 with costs and given three months in which to pay.

"This sentence was woefully and grossly inadequate," said the Standard. "In view of the gravity of the charge, the magistrates betrayed a public trust in failing either to impose the maximum penalty of imprisonment... or to remit the case to trial by a superior court."

Hundreds of readers wrote a letter of approval, many of them pointing out that technical offences against the state often drew far heavier penalties.

Britons Still Favor Holidays at Seaside

Canada Is Alluring To Former Prisoners

LETHBRIDGE, Alta., May 16 — (CP)—Former German prisoners of war, although kept under constant guard while held captive in Canada, studied and learned enough about the Canadian way of life to still cherish hopes of returning to this country.

Ever since the German prisoners were evacuated to England for subsequent return to their native land two or three years ago, scores of those once held in the large prisoner-of-war camp here have written to district newspapers expressing a keen desire to return to Canada.

Many of the writers of these letters request assistance in some form or other that will enable them to return here. All are of the opinion that Canada is a great country.

Typical of the letters sent from Germany was one from Erwin Schiborr of Kirchwehel, Uelzen. My mind has grown up in the opinion that Canada is a country of real freedom, he writes. "Freedom which we never knew in Europe but for which millions of people are longing for."

Schiborr, who claims to be 26 years old, in good health and experienced in farm work writes in clear English that he has been trying for two years to get permission to emigrate to Canada but that up to the present, he has been unsuccessful.

"The only way to get it," he says, "is if anyone in Canada should apply for my person."
