On concluding her paper, the President, Mrs. G. S. McLeod who presided, conveyed the standing vote of thanks to Mrs. Nash on behalf of the audience. ANOTHER ROBBERY.—The grocery store of L.A. Hazard was broken into and entered from the rear some time Wednesday night or early morning. The only thing taken was a can of peanut butter, which was afterwards found in the yard. Officer Watson Higgins was dispatched to the scene of the robbery, and after looking the ground over noticed familiar footprints. Acting on his hunch he made an arrest about three o'clock yesterday afternoon and shortly afterwards received a confession which proved his theory correct. Officer Higgins stated he thought that this arrest would clear up a number of robberies which were perpetrated in the vicinity of Elm Avenue some weeks ago.

Golden Text: If ye love me ye will keep my commandments John XIV 15.

REVIEW: STUDIES IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE

When Jesus asked any one to follow him it was not merely to go with him to a certain place. He had a spiritual objective toward which he always pressed. It was nothing more or less than the conquest of the world to righteousness. His way is still waging. This is the meaning of discipleship. To follow him is to take up and perpetuate his work. It is to have his vision of a world subdued to righteousness and to strive for it. . . . The teaching of Jesus falls like a trip-hammer upon current selfish maxims. "Looking out for number one" is demolished with one swift blow. Doing a thing with the expectation of an equivalent return in the Master's thought robs it of all altruistic character. Loving one's neighbor is not a test rather than loving one's lover. Doing good to good-doers is no mark of self-sacrifice, but rather of egotism. These have been called the "impossible commands." They are impossible to human nature without divine aid. But Jesus points to a possible sonship with God in which a man can and does do the deeds of his Father. . . . There was a time when the Bible was chained to the reading desk, so scarce and costly were the copies. Now the Bible is everywhere, the best-known, the best read book in the world. It is in the heart, on the tongue, in the home, in the hotel. From it comes wisdom, profit and completeness. Prayer in its ideal form is an outlook, a survey of one's environment with a view to finding what it requires. This is followed by introspection, the inlook to take account of stock of one's resources. Then comes the appeal to God to fill out where there is lack, to strengthen the will and purpose to apply one's resources to what the environment requires. . . . The Divinity of Jesus was no bullet proof vest insuring safety in temptation. He was tempted just as men are today. For that very reason his example is a means of support to those who are tempted. . . . The affirmation that all men are equal is absurd. The facts refute it. What is meant is that all men should have equal opportunity to employ such gifts as they have. There are five talent, two talent and one talent men today. Common sense and industry doubles one's capital. Fear and sloth extirpates the one talent one may possess. . . . Christianity created the modern home. With the exceptions which only go to prove the rule the homes of antiquity were haunts of lust and cruelty. When Christianity prevailed husband and wife became equals, and children had their rights to play, be educated and be companions to their parents, not to slaves. . . . Salt, light, city on a hill, how familiar! Yet how arresting when used by Jesus to show man in his social relations. Moral conditions are confessedly bad. Law and education may palliate, but when to these is added the saline influence of good individual lives a cure may be hoped for. . . . The sovereign cure of the ills of the community is LOVE! There must be law and education of course, but these without love will not be effectual. On analysis it will be found that the lack of love makes social harm possible. Love prevents the intrusion upon the rights of others. Love leads to the service of others. Love places out the law, it carries it further than it could ever go of itself. . . . In the kaleidoscope of Pentecost the apostles saw the beautiful pattern of how all races were to be included in the Shining of the Gospel. They worked to that end. They were not striving to uphold an institution or defend a system of theology. Neither as yet existed. They had a vivid realization of God as a Person and Jesus as the revealer of that Person. They saw the motive and meaning of his suffering. They felt themselves associated in that suffering in such a way that they could no longer live selfishly. They must be "ambassadors," devoted to the "ministry of reconciliation." In that spirit Philip went to Samaria, Peter to Syria, and Paul to Europe. . . . Jesus was as ambitious as Napoleon. His objective was world-conquest. How different his motive and method. Jesus' army is an army of teachers. They teach nothing but what Jesus commanded. . . . Hopeless gloom settled upon the disciples in that last night with him. But Jesus pierced the gloom with his words of comfort, assuring them of the continuity of life in the beyond, a life of bliss, reunion and recognition.

Richard the Lionhearted is one of the great heroes of legendary romance. His prodigies of personal valor performed in the Third Crusade made him the theme of song and story. Four hundred years after Richard ruled, Virginia Tobacco became the favourite of the smokers of England, and so it has continued to rule to this day, reaching perfection in REX Cigarettes—a royal pleasure of royal quality.
