SANDRA THE JEALOUS

By Jane Phelps

SANDRA ASSERTS HER RIGHTS

CHAPTER XVII.

Who could the original of all these pictures be? I had deciphered a name on the back of one of those I found in the bureau drawer: "Leola." What an odd name! Did Everett always know women with odd names? I can't explain the emotion that impelled me to say over and over: "Leola and Sandra, Sandra and Leola."

Then it came to me. This Leola must have been Everett's wife, the first Mrs. Graham. But why had he not taken her pictures down. I would not stand it. I would ask him who she was, and if I was right, every single picture of her should be banished. It was bad enough to be the second Mrs. Graham without having to be reminded of it all the time by pictures of my predecessor.

I was sitting in the library when Everett came in. I had tried to read, and also to practice a little but could do neither. All I could think of was that lovely pictured face. At first I thought I would ask Hetty. But he had warned me not to question the servants, so I made up my mind to wait up and ask him when he came in.

"What are you sitting up for?" he asked. I was so absorbed in my thoughts, I had not heard him. "I thought I told you to go to bed." He spoke exactly as he might have

I did until he left the house and I was alone again. Then I remembered. Slowly I went upstairs and into his room. Once more I took out the pictures and studied the face. There was something now that I had not noticed the night before—a strength of will, as denoted by the firm chin, as well as beauty.

"She wouldn't be afraid of him," I said to myself as I gazed. "She'd ask all the questions she wanted to, even if she did make him angry." I heard someone in the hall and quickly tried to put the pictures away. But not quite quickly enough. Hetty came in before I had them hidden.

"Who is this, Hetty?" I asked, acting on impulse. "Don't you know?" Her surprise was evident. "No, or I shouldn't have asked you." Already I wished I had not spoken.

"Why, that's Mr. Graham's other wife." So I had been right in my surprise! But how terrible of Everett to forget to put all of her pictures away. Whatever would people think to see that big oil portrait over the mantle in the drawing room and that one in the library? I would have them taken down immediately. I called Richard and gave the order. "Where shall I put them Mrs. Graham?" he asked. "Isn't there an attic in the house?" "Yes, Madame." "Very well, put them in there." I thought I heard Hetty gasp, but I paid no attention. And a little while afterward, when I went into the drawing room, the portrait was gone.

Tomorrow — Sandra Hides Her Heartache.
