A Serving Tray If a child wishes to help her mother serve lemonade, or any other drink use the whole ornamental muffin pan as a tray for the glasses. Each glass will stay in its own compartment and is proof against mishap.

Cut Flowers Do not crowd the stems of flowers in a small vase. Use a larger vase than is necessary, so the stems will absorb nourishment and make the flowers last longer.

Windows Dissolve a lump of starch in the water with which the windows are to be washed and it will make the glass clear and sparkling.

EASY TO MAKE JELLIED LUNCHEON SALAD

4 teaspoons plain gelatine 1/2 cup cold water 1 can condensed vegetable soup 1 can condensed tomato soup 1 cup cold water 1 cup cold water 1 cup cold water 1 cup cold water

Combine the gelatine and cold water and set aside until needed. Turn the vegetable soup and tomato soup into a saucepan and heat just to boiling point, stirring until the soups are blended. Remove from heat. Add stiffened gelatine and sugar and stir until gelatine and sugar are dissolved. Stir in cold water. Chill with occasional stirring, until just beginning to set.

Turn into individual moulds that have been rinsed with cold water or brushed lightly with salad oil. Chill until set. For serving, unmould the jellies in crisp lettuce cups and pass mayonnaise or thick salad dressing.

Little Girl: Mummy, coming home from school I walked through the cemetery and read all the words on the tombstones and what I want to know is, where do they bury the bad people.

THE RIGHT FAMILY Two visitors to a West Texas town were strolling down one of its boulevards admiring the beautiful bluebonnets that bordered the thoroughfare. One expressed the opinion that this flower was of the lupine family, the other disagreed. Then they spotted a sprightly little elderly lady tripping along the sidewalk toward them, and they decided to leave the question to her.

"Madam, said one visitor politely, "would you be kind enough to tell us something about your lovely bluebonnets?" "Gladly," replied the little lady, "do they belong to the lupine family?" "Oh, no," she answered quickly. "They belong to the O'Brien family, who own all this property!"

Why Couples Torture Each Other Still Unanswerable Riddle

IN TELLING me his matrimonial troubles an old colored friend of mine wound up his tale of woe by asking: "What makes my wife treat me the way she do?" No one can answer that question, for the greatest mystery in the world is, why so many husbands and wives treat each other the way they do. Compared to that, the riddle of the Sphinx is a child's guessing game.

If people married for hate instead of love; if men and women had in them a sadistic streak that made them enjoy torturing each other; or if they were just so dull and stupid and blind that they trampled over each other's finer feelings without knowing what they did; or if they were of just such naturally mean dispositions that no one could live in peace with them, it would be understandable why so many husbands and wives make marriage a purgatory for their mates.

But such is not the case. Most marriages are made in love. The great majority of husbands and wives are of just such naturally mean dispositions that no one could live in peace with them, it would be understandable why so many husbands and wives make marriage a purgatory for their mates.

FAIL IN UNDERSTANDING I think the reason there are so many unhappy married couples is because there are so few husbands and wives who ever learn to understand each other. They make no attempt to learn to speak each other's language, or to find out what makes the wheels go around in each other's hearts and minds. In proof of this, take just the ordinary, everyday, run-of-the-mill faults that put so many marriages on the skids.

There is nagging, which is the top-drawer crime that any wife can commit, so far as men are concerned, and certainly no one can blame a husband for resenting being pin-pricked to death by his wife's tongue. But does any man try to understand what makes his wife nag? Not one in a million. He doesn't even suspect that her nagging is the revenge she takes on him for his ceasing to be a lover and becoming a mere husband.

She is heart-hungry, starving for soft talk. She wants him to flatter her and tell her she gets more beautiful every day, and that she is the ONLY woman in the world to him. Probably there isn't a nagging wife in the world whose mouth couldn't be shut by a few kisses every day that didn't seem to have come out of the lexicon.

And if men's chief grouse against wives is nagging, women's eternal gripe is that their husbands neglect them. They want their husbands to be good providers, but they also expect them to be entertaining and amusing companions and to keep up the tactics of courtship after marriage. You hear no other complaint from wives so frequently as that their husbands won't take them out stepping, and that they have to sit in their chairs after their husbands have settled down in their after dinner, with their papers.

Many a wife breaks her heart over her husband's neglect and thinks he has ceased to love her because he fails to show her the attentions he did when he was courting her, when the real reason is that the poor man is working so hard to give her all the luxuries she craves. Pitiful and tragic, isn't it, that so many husbands and wives never even try to understand each other?

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

"Oh-ho!" said James starting up in alarm only to recall that the cream had been put in place for the hauler last night. "Is that Johnnie's truck?" That was the beginning of our day. It ended when a visiting car rolled down the drive-way going out into the moonlight. I can see the lights field by field, the trees just beyond the hill and the time borders very close on the Sabbath. My wife was on the window this morning. Light showers disturbed the early hay-makers but on the other hand to bring much-needed moisture for the growing crops. It interrupted, what was intended to be the end of the first wedding at Alderlea and sent the men east a new floor in a barn. Jeanie and I could hear the sound of their industry while they were about our Saturday's work. It was a trouble all to carry "the Sunday's wood" to the box for the morning.
