A Sweetheart At Thirty

THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION

By Marion Rubincam

REALIZATION

Chapter 1

It was not until early spring that I began to realize what I was—or rather, what I had become. The transformation came later—quite a bit later and was slow in coming. The realization was even slower, perhaps.

That was—well, let's see, three years or more ago. But the period actually covered by my transformation was not much more than two. And I am counting in that period every minute from the time I began to realize.

But before I begin, I want to say one thing, and I shall repeat it again and again as I go on with my story. And that is—

Any woman can be exactly what she wishes to be. Her fate lies in her own hands. Circumstances ever which she has no control, may help or hinder her; but in the end, what she is, depends on what she wishes to be. The power is in herself alone.

The period of realizing what I was, then began very early in the Spring. This seemed appropriate—Spring is the time of rebirth. Nature renews its youth, why not man and woman? But, of course, I didn't think that or anything like that then.

Then, the coming of the Spring meant that we would let the coal fires go out, and that was less work for me, but also that we would plant the garden, and that meant more work for me. It meant that I would eventually put away my one black serge, which had completed its second winter of wear, but also that I would bring out my black linen, which would begin its third summer of wear.

It meant—well, practical things little, sordid, economical things. It meant nothing romantic. In fact, I would not even have guessed it was so near Spring, had not Violet come running in from school swinging her hat, her hair flying loose, her hat in her hand.

"Vi!" her mother reproved her. "What a way for a girl your age to be carrying on! You've run till you're all out of breath—"

"Sure," Vi answered slangily. "I raced James back from school—beat him too!"

She turned from the table, where she had dropped her belongings in a heap, and fairly danced to the open door. Still more dancing than walking, she went out to the porch and stood there taunting her brother, who was coming up more slowly. Her mother turned with some annoyance and shut the door.

"We'll all catch our deaths!" she grumbled. "As for that child and her antics, she'll be in bed sick. Such weather as this!"

Mrs. Haines returned to her ironing. But I went to the window and looked out. Vi's voice came back to me.

"Beat you, beat you!" She was fairly singing her triumph. "You're a boy and I beat you."

She repeated it over and over, it really sounded like a chant—that is, a joyous chant. Even in those days I noticed the rhythm in her words—

Beat you, beat you. You're a boy and I beat you."

Can you notice the rhythm in the words? They sing themselves. I have noticed since—for my powers of noticing things have grown so much more acute lately, that Violet often talks rhythmetically. Perhaps it is the natural poetry that is in the child that expresses itself so.

James was coming up the path to the porch, carrying a load of school books under his arm. In spite of his sister's taunts he was looking quite peaceful.

"Not many boys would be so good natured if a girl beat them," I remarked to Esther.

"Not many boys would let their sisters beat them," she grumbled.

The two came in again, James shutting the door which Violet had forgotten to close. A breath of fresh air blew in with them.

"Mother says you'll catch cold," I began. Esther was evidently in a bad humour and I wanted to smooth things down and keep the children quiet.

"Catch cold without a coat while I'm running!" Vi scoffed. "Why, it's Spring out. It's wonderful out. It's so warm and sunny and fresh and sweet. Why don't you two old stuffy creatures put on your things and come out and smell it?"

Her little impudence was so pretty that not even her mother resented it. She looked through the window at the sunny yard, where patches of brownish, dirty snow still lingered.

"Well, 'tis March," she agreed reluctantly—Esther hated to agree with anyone, I've sometimes thought. "Let's see, it's March 6th. My land, it is getting along. Enid do you know you had a birthday last week?"

"No, I forgot," I answered and laughed.

"I should think you would be forgetting!" Esther said cattishly. "You've had so many of them now. You're 25, do you know that? And an old maid!"

She went calmly back to her ironing.

REPORTS OF WOMEN'S INSTITUTES OF P. E. ISLAND

Middleton—Nine members of this club met at the home of Mrs. Vernon Craig on July 10th. After the regular business the report of the Convention was given by the delegates. $5 was voted as prizes to the school children. $42.26 was reported as receipts from the holding of an ice cream festival which was held recently. The interior and exteriors of the schools are now being painted at the expense of the Institute. Miss Mabel McCardle was appointed as Secretary in the place of Miss Roberts who has resigned. A social hour was spent by all after which the meeting adjourned.

Sea View—The regular meeting of this Institute was held at the school on July 12th. There were eleven members present. After the usual business the delegates to the Convention gave a most interesting report of the meetings then held. The meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Miscouche— Thirteen members of this club met at the home of Mrs. Ben Perry on July 13th. After the regular business the report of the Convention was given by the delegates. It was decided to hold a Pie Social in July. A musical programem followed after which lunch was served and a social hour spent.

Elmira—The regular meeting of this Institute was held at the home of Mrs. M. A. McPhee on July 7th. There were eleven women present. After the reading and adoption of the minutes, the report of the Convention was given by the delegates. A paper on "Laundry Efficiency" was read and enjoyed. The sign post for the cross roads and for the schools have been paid for. An Ice Cream freezer has been bought for the use of the Institute.

New Perth—Thirteen members and three visitors met for the regular meeting of this club, which was held at the home of Mrs. S. MacLaren on July 7th. After the usual business the report of the Convention was given by the delegates, $26.55 is the amount due to New Perth district from a concert given in New Perth Hall on June 20th by an outside company, as reported at this meeting.

East Baltic—The regular meeting of this Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Eugene Fay on July 18th. There were thirteen members and six visitors present. Roll call was answered by the giving of jokes. It was decided to have the school white washed and painted at the expense of the club. A creamer is to be purchased to be used as a drinking fountain in the school. The resignation of the secretary was received and her successor appointed at this time, after which a hearty vote of thanks was tendered the retiring officer, Miss Stewart, for the excellent work which she has accomplished for the Institute. One new member was added to the club at this meeting.

Malpeque—Ten members of this Institute met at the Institute Room on the evening of July 13th. After the regular business it was decided to hold an ice cream social in August to raise funds for the school. The meeting then adjourned.

St. Nicholas— Sixteen members and three visitors met at the home of Mrs. Arcule Gaudet on July 10th. After the regular business it was decided to put a hard wood floor in one room of the school, also to hold an ice cream social in order to raise funds. One new member joined at this time.

Central Royalty—The regular meeting of this Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Jas. Swan on July 7th. There were ten women present. After the regular business the report of the Convention was given by the delegates. Arrangements were completed for the holding of a garden party. The members of this Institute attended the school meeting and offered to help finance the building of the new school. The meeting was adjourned and a pleasant social hour spent by all.

Lorne Valley—The regular meeting of this Institute was held at the home of Mrs. James Shaw on July 13th. Nine members and three visitors were present. After the reading and adoption of the minutes and the report of the convention it was decided tio appoint a school committee. This Institute was organized only in May but great interest is being taken in the work and plans are being made for much work in the future. An ice cream social has already been held to raise funds for the improvement of the school. Two new members were added at this meeting. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. James McLeod on August 10th.

Modern Flapper to be Dethroned

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug 3.— A Grecian maiden, with classically bound hair, long flowing robes and sandal like footwear such will be the stylish girl who will replace the present "flapper," in the opinion of some delegates attending the convention of the National Hairdressers' Association, which opened here today. The hairdress naturally, would have to fit the flowing sleeves of the straight line frocks, declared one of the delegates, bobbed hair eventually will have to go.

The coiffure must fit fashion and place, said another expert, and it is about time that women learn not to wear the same sort all the time. A coiffure becoming for afternoon wear is not always fitted for evening appearance, or some other occasion.

The return of the wig, though not so conspicuous as it was centuries ago, is seen by other hairdressers as probable when the "curly bob" finds her days counted. Women who pay as much attention to the coiffure as they do to dress will be oloked upon as fashionable in the future was the surmise of another delegate.

Talks on the art of hair dressing will be illustrated by practical demonstration during the three day gathering. Mayor Kiel presented to the assembly, at the conclusion of his address of welcome, a key made from the hair of an auburn haired American beauty.

LIBRARY FACILITIES IN P. E. I.

Mrs. W. S. Louson, of Charlottetown, P. E. I., sends the following sketch of library conditions in that beautiful little province:

"Charlottetown has the largest libary consisting of the Library of the Legislative Assembly with 21,000 books and the Dodd and general collection of 3,600 books both housed together, most inadequately in a room of the Provincial building. Funds are limited, no provision is made for books for children, nor is co-operation between schools and library possible owing to the lack of reference and other books needed for the purpose, an adequate library in Charlottetown would not only be a boon to its citizens but a valuable asset in attracting tourists to the place.

Summerside has a small but well equipped reading room and collection of books supported entirely by a few generous members of the community.

Cavendish has had a good collection of books for some years:

Malpeque and Georgetown have small circulating libraries established by the Women's Institutes.

These five (5) places cover the extent of concerted library service on the Island.

A number of the schools have collections of books for the children. These are selected by the teacher and paid for by the community with some help given by the Dept. of Education. No use is made of these books excepting by the school children, no provision is made for the continuation reading of the boy or girl leaving school when self education may be said to be just beginning and books most needed.

Several women's Institutes made use of the Travelling Library sent out by McGill University. This is most commendable and should be used more generally all over the Island, or until a similiar travelling library with headquarters in one center is established in this Province. No other form of library can so well take care of the needs of such a scattered population. The cost or establishing such a system here would be about three cents per capita. Each collection of books sent out by McGill cost the borhower four dollars ($4.00). This amount might better be invested in books for the Island forming a permanent collection and of use to many. Or the Travelling Library could be maintained by the Dept. of Education under the supervision of a trained librarian. The books united to the needs of all ages and tastes placed in the schools for circulation, making this one of the means of using the school plant for general use in the community.

MARY KINLEY INGRAHAM,
Secy. Treasurer of the Maratime Library Association.

POINT PLEASANT SCHOOL CLOSING

The semi-annual examination and closing exercises of Point Pleasant School were held on Friday afternoon, June 30th, in the presence of a large number of parents and visitors. The class room was tastefully decorated for the occasion. The pupils were examined in the several subjects by their teacher, Miss Vera Hyde and proved by their prompt and correct answers that they had been carefully taught. After a well rendered program the teacher was presented with a purse of money and an address, which was read by one of the pupils, Clark MacLean to which Miss Hyde fittingly replied, thanking them for their kindness shown her during her short stay with them. All the rate-payers present expressed their satisfaction with the progress made by the pupils and regreted that she could not see her way clear to remain with them another year. The singing of the National Anthem brought this pleasant afternoon to a close.

Strange Tales Told by Explorer from Sub-Arctic Region

EDMONTON, Alta., Aug. 4.— Strange tales have been told by explorers from Sub-Arctic regions but none more strange than those of Frank Perry, mining engineer of Vancouver, who is back to civilization after 17 years lone prospecting in an immense unknown territory in far Northern British Columbia, close to the Yukon boundary. Discovery of an almost tropical valley, with rivers of boiling water and many mineral springs, abnormal plant growth and plentiful with game, is reported by Mr. Perry.

The area of the terrain in which the engineer has been travelling for the past seventeen years is roughly 700 miles north and south and; 300 miles wide it lies between the coastal range and the Liard and Fort Nelson rivers, and contains factors hitherto unknown to Canadians.

For mineral reasons, Mr. Perry at the present time, is not divulging the exact location of the "hot water" valley which he came upon in the depth of winter. The unusual sight of a heavy fog in winter attracted him to the valley and later exploration showed it to be approximately 200 miles long and about forty miles wide. Rivers of hot water ran through it fed by hundreds of hot springs, which bubbled out of the ground in all directions, the steam from these being condensed on rising forming the fog which he had first seen from the range crest.

Mr. Perry remained in the valley and its neighborhood for a year and never before in his experinces in a game country had he seen so many wild animals. These congregated due to the luxurient vegetation made possible by the heat generated by the springs and in the valley were hundreds of mountain sheep and goats, caribou and moose with also bears and other fur bearing animals. The moose, almost square from fat, were so tame that he has been able to walk amongst them and could almost touch them. The Indians, although knowing the valley to be a hunter's paridise never visit it through the superstition that prehistoric animals still roam the district.

In addition to the hot springs some of which break from the ground at boiling temperature, there are mineral springs, of various descriptions and to these the explorer attributes the extraordinary fatness of the wild animals in part.

The tree growth in the valley was abnormal, Mr. Perry states. The ordinary wild rose bushes were like trees, with stems as thick as a man's forearm, and so dense that it was impossible to force a way through while the willows grow to tree size and it was possible to walk along the branches. Some of the trunks of the latter were fully one foot and a half through, vines grew to a length of about 60 feet and nettles and ferns grew to unusual height. Birch trees says the explorer, grew to the height of 700 feet and for some peculiar reason these bent over and nearly touched the ground, while the grasses and shrubs common to the north were all of unusual size.

Another peculiar feature was that the valley was free of frost in the winter due to the action of the boiling springs and the consequent vapor. Important mineral deposits were discovered by Mr. Perry including gold, silver and copper. Coal iron and oil formations were also found.

While Mr. Perry travelled the blank spaces at the top of the map his only companions were two pack dogs who carried his equipment and he lived off the country as he went. A year's travelling was necessary to reach civilization but the engineer plans to return by airplane, the journey which would ordinarly occupy a year taking but a few days.

Mrs. Asquith Chief Witness at Probe

LONDON, Aug. 2.— A verdict of death from natural causes was returned by a coroner's jury who enquired into the sudden death of the Dowager Countess of Essex, daughter of the late Beach Grant, of New York. Mrs. Asquith, with whom Lady Essex drove home from a dinner party at the house of the Hon. Mrs. Rupert Beckett an hour or two before her death was the principal witness.

"I thought she was looking extremely well," she testified. "In fact, I had not seen her for a time and I did not think she had ever looked better. Lady Essex and I were playing bridge with Mr. Beckett until late in the evening. We left at about ten minutes past twelve, and I drove her home in the car. We discussed plans and she was very cheerful."

In answer to the coroner, Mrs. Asquith said that the Countess was free from worries, and "Mr. Asquith said to me next morning he had never seen the Countess looking so well." Mrs. Asquith said that they arranged to meet on on the following day at lunch. The Countess was going to Paris and Venice and then she was going to her (Mrs. Asquith) in October.

"As I left her on her doorstep she turned round and waved her hand to me, and said she would not be late next day, and that is the last I saw of her."

The Coroner: "I suppose you were playing for ordinary points?"

Mrs. Asquith: "At bridge, you mean? Yes, at low points.'

The coroner: "You never heard her say anything about suicide?"

Mrs. Asquith: "No, never. She was the last woman in the world to talk of suicide."

Lady Essex's French maid named Mignonne broke down on Friday morning when she went to call the Countess she found her in her bath, her body dimly visible under the water. She could prescribed for sleeplessness, but height of the water or as to whether the electric lights were on. As she took her seat next to Mrs. Asquith on compleing her evidence, she collapsed and Mrs. Asquith led her sobbing from the court room.

Dr. Lawrence, Lady Essex's doctor, described a nerve affection and heart weakness for which he had been treating her. He had prescribed for sleplessness, but saw her on Monday, July 24th., and found she was doing well and no longer needed the drugs ordered. The doctor was called on Friday morning and found Lady Essex on her right side in the bath. The elbows were bent and her head was toward the bottom of the bath. The bath was empty of water, but had evidently been completely filled.
