This War—Four Years Ago

By The Canadian Press

NOV. 4, 1940—Greek troops penetrated seven miles into Albania, announced armed merchant cruisers Laurentic and Patroclus torpedoed by German submarine; 368 saved from Laurentic and 263 from Patroclus. Two Italian submarines reported sunk.

NOV. 5, 1940—Armed merchant cruiser Jervis Bay sunk defending convoy against German armed raider in Atlantic, four of 38 vessels in convoy also sunk. Admiralty announced sinking of two German submarines. Churchill pledged utmost air to Greeks.

No Happiness in the Home When Mother Is Sick

The tired, worn out mother cannot make a happy home if she is sick and worried by the never ending household duties.

She gets run down and becomes nervous and irritable, downhearted and discouraged, can't rest at night, and gets up in the morning feeling as tired as when she went to bed.

Women suffering in this way may find in Milburn's Health and Nerve Pills a remedy with which to help recuperate their health, build up the run down system, and assist them back to health—happiness again.

Price 50c a box, 65 pills, at all drug counters.

Look for our trade mark a "Red Heart" on the package.

No Sign Of Nazis Pulling Out Of Italy

51,000 Square Miles Of Country Liberated In 14 Months.

ROME, Nov. 2 — (CP) —More than 51,000 square miles of Italy have been liberated by Allied armies during the last 14 months, but there still is no sign that the Germans are pulling out of the war-torn country, Gen. Sir Harold Alexander said today.

During this period, the Allied 5th armies advanced north 500 miles from Reggio Calabria in the toe of Italy to the outskirts of Bologna.

Acknowledging that the Allied assault on the enemy's Gothic Line had come to an almost complete halt in the mud of the Po Valley and the peaks of the Apennine mountains, the Italian ground commander said: "I can't tell how long it will take to drive them out, but it will be done."

He said the Gothic Line was broken up by the "double-handed punch" technique—secretly switching the 8th Army to hit the Germans' weak Adriatic flank, then punching through in the centre with the 5th Army when the Germans drew off some strength from that mountain sector.

He said American troops alone had suffered at least 90,000 casualties during the campaign.

The Germans have continued to send reinforcements into Italy, despite their reverses on the eastern and western fronts, Gen. Alexander disclosed. He admitted puzzlement at this enemy strategy, pointing out that the enemy already had suffered 194,000 casualties in Italy, including 34,000 killed and 104,000 wounded.

The original plan for attacking the Gothic Line had to be altered because of the withdrawal of all French divisions and some American divisions for the invasion of Southern France.

"Only those who are responsible for the conduct of the war as a whole can decide what is best for the strategy as a whole," he said, "and we have to carry out our tasks with what we are given.

"At no time during the Italian campaign have we had any but a slight superiority in numbers."

Though declining to guess when the Italian fighting would end, Gen. Alexander said he could not imagine the war in Europe continuing beyond 1945.

Edwin Johnstone SAYS:

..Lethargy and Indifference toward ACTION in taking out Life Insurance have been the cause of many tragedies of struggling dependents left unprovided for. And yet it's not all indifference — it's mostly procrastination. You know the story—"I'll do it someday" means that it is never done. If you haven't yet "got around to it" why not take action this week?

Lesson II. November 5th

EFFECT OF ALCOHOL ON FRIENDSHIP

BY C. S. FARMER

Inter-Senior

The Wallace family have often spoken about the evening they had spent with Dectective MacDonald around their livingroom fireplace.

One day Mr. Wallace said to Bob and Mary, "You will soon be called upon to decide whether you will take alcoholic drinks or not. You both have many friends and you will be invited to more and more parties as you grow older. Some day you will find that beer or hard cider or some other drink containing a rather small percentage of alcohol is being served at the party. Your hostess may describe the drink as a cocktail and tell you that it will do you no harm."

"Why!" said Mary, "I hate the thought of the stuff."

"So do I," said Bob.

"So far," continued their father "you have lived in a home where liquor is not served and you have been warned about the evils of drinking. But many people are fond of liquor and think it is smart to drink it. And the brewer and distillers have made many people think that they cannot entertain their friends properly without it. The large sums of money spent on liquor advertising have blinded some people to the real effects of drink. If the same amount of magazine space and radio time were devoted to telling the public about the homes blighted and the friendships spoiled by drink, most of our young people would refuse to take the first glass."

• • •

Early in November the rugby season closed with the local collegiate winning the county title. Mrs. Simpleton, whose daughter, Irmo "simply adored" the rugby players, invited the team and their girl friends over to a party to celebrate the victory. Bob's friend, Bill Cowan invited Mary Wallace to go with him. The evening was spent in the usual round of games and entertainment, but when the time came to serve refreshments, Mrs. Simpleton brought the crowd into a nicely furnished basement room with a table in the centre laden with crackers, cheese, olives, pickles, and other delicacies. In one corner of the room was a serving shelf with a man dressed in white behind it. Mrs. Simpleton proudly pointed to this corner and said that was her "Bar."

She invited her guests to step up to the bar for something good to drink. Bill Cowan and Mary went over with the others. Bill accepted the glass which the butler gave him. but Mary asked him what he was serving. When he said it was cocktail she declined it and asked for a glass of water or ginger ale.

Mary noticed that the party soon began to grow much more noisy and even rowdy. Boys and girls who had been enjoying a good round of games up to now became rough and talked in loud boastful tones. One boy who was about the weakest player on the team, and who had never scored a point all season, was standing in the centre of one group boasting to them about all the touchdowns he had made. Mary thought he was a pathetic figure. Another boy thought it would be a good idea to turn the clock back, but in his awkardness he broke the minute hand off. Another group of boys and girls joined in a dance around the serving table when suddenly there was a crash and a beautiful lamp fell to the floor, breaking the shade into a dozen pieces.

Bill Cowan was acting strangely, like the others, and Mary wondered if she should let him see her home. Fortunately she had noticed where the phone was in the hall so she slipped out and called her father, asking him to come for her.

A few days later Bob Wallace met Bill Cowan on the way to school and Bill said, "I suppose you heard what a fool I made of myself at the party the other night?"

Bob had to admit that Mary had mentioned it at the house.

"Whatever it was in those cocktails, Mrs Simpleton gave us, it surely made us all act silly. Can you tell me why we lost control of ourselves so completely?"

"Why yes! I can tell you something about it. Mary and I were just reading a book about alcohol and it tells why people go silly when they drink it. You see alcohol is one of the ingredients of these cocktails, even though it may form only a small percentage of the drink. But the alcohol is quickly taken and absorbed by the digestive organs and sent into the blood stream. The blood, as you know, is pumped by the heart to all parts of the body. But if there is alcohol in the blood it will be absorbed by the brain and nervous system more than by any other part of the body.

"Now a person's brain is made up of three parts. The lower areas control the involuntary muscles which stimulate the heart and other organs which work as well when we sleep as when we are awake. We do not need to give them any conscious thought to keep them working for us. The middle areas are the seat of our control actions which are developed into habits like speaking, reading, writing and doing other things which we have done so often that we can do them now almost without thinking. But the highest areas of the brain are the seat of our ideals and highest emotions. If this part of our brain is in good working order we can solve new problems. More important this part of the brain helps us to distinguish right from wrong. In short, it is the upper part of the brain which makes men superior to the animals.

"Alcohol makes its first attack upon this clever part of the brain and puts it to sleep. This explains why a drinker loses his power to distinguish right from wrong. He may do the most foolish things and think they are sensible. What is worse— he will do the craziest things without knowing he is causing danger to himself and others. Worse still, he may do wrong to himself and to others and spend the rest of his life regretting what he did when his power of reason was taken away from him."

Bill Cowan warmly thanked Bob Wallace for his explanation and declared that he would never again fall for the idea that it is smart to drink.

At school that morning Bill and Bob were talking to Pete Grog, who was also one of the rugby players at Mrs. Simpleton's party. Pete had been drinking at the part and Bill asked Bob to tell him why it was unwise for a boy to form the drink habit. Bob proceeded to tell Pete the same story as he had just told Bill.

Unfortunately Pete was not much impressed.

"Why," he demanded "should" any person be afraid to drink what is sold by our own government under the control of special stores which have the coat of arms of our own province on the door? My own father drinks with his friends when he wants to and so shall I."

TAKE 2 TEMPERANCE STUDY

"Does your father advise you to become a drinker?" said Bill.

"He certainly does not," replied Pete. "He told me just the other day that if he had the money back which he spent on drink we could have our house paid for. But I am not going to spend a lot of money on drink the way my dad did. I just want to take a glass once in a while when I am at a party or when my friends drop in for a call. I never intend to drink very much."

"You are playing with dynamite when you talk that way." said Bob. "Very few people approve of getting drunk, but many people cannot resist the temptation to drink more when they have had a little; and, before they realize it they are drunk."

"Even if a man can remain a very moderate drinker it still takes a heavy toll on his purse. It has been estimated that one glass of beer a day costs a man over one thousand dollars in thirty years. Few stop at one glass."

Bill Cowan broke into the conversation. "It looks to me as if a boy has to choose his friends very carefully. For me, I'm not going to kick around with any gang that looks for a drink at parties. I have been caught once and now I know how easy it is to drift into a bad habit. From now on I am going to keep away from places where people think it is smart to drink."

QUESTIONS

1. Why is it that a young person who has been drinking does not act sensibly?

2. Why do young people need to be very careful in choosing their friends?

Scholars 12, 13, 14 years answer question 1. Those 16, 16, 17 answer both.

FITNESS FIRST FOR HAPPY HOMES

Radio Play For Juniors

BY FRANK HASKINS

JUNIOR

Announcer: In the livingroom of Goodfellow home, Ronald, Gordon and Phyllis are enjoying a chat about their favorite foods with 13-year-old Marie, who has come from another city to visit them for a few weeks.

Everyone likes Marie, who is a quiet thoughtful kind of girl. Since the death of her parents, two years before Marie has lived with goodhearted Mr. and Mrs. Harris. Marie is a cousin of the Goodfellow children.

As we look in upon them, Phyllis and Marie are knitting for the Junior Red Cross, Gordon is seated at the table looking over a model airplane, while Ronald is perched on the edge of a chair.

Dialogue.

Gordon: I like hamburgers best—lots of them.

Ronald: I do wish mother would let me have all the ice cream I could eat! Right now, I'd like a dish piled high with strawberry ice cream.

Gordon: I'd rather have chocolate ice cream.

Phyllis: Why are boys always so greedy? I like milk shakes best. What do you like, Marie?

Marie: Where I have been living, the folks have been swell and we have lots of good things, but there is something you have here I like very much.

Ronald: What is it?

Marie: It is your Sunday morning breakfast.

Gordon: Why don't you have breakfast too, on Sunday mornings?

Phyllis: You shouldn't ask personal questions, Gordon.

Marie: I had to stay in bed Sundays until nearly noon as quiet as a mouse. If I got up and made the slightest noise Mr. Harris would wake up and get cross, so I was told not to get up until I was called.

Phyllis: Sometimes I wouldn't mind sleeping in.

Ronald: Yes, Phyllis is an old sleepy head.

Marie: It is funny how many things you want to get up and do on bright mornings when you have to stay in bed and try to read or listen to the clock ticking. I think it is grand to be able to get up like you do and eat together and then go to Church and Sunday School.

Phyllis: I never thought about it that way.

Marie: I used to hate Sunday mornings. Our place was always a mess after Saturday night parties and I used to help clean things up.

Gordon: But parties are fun!

Marie: There was no fun about these. I was packed off to bed early. Often I woke up because they were drinking and the parties got very noisy and nasty.

Phyllis: I often wonder why people are so foolish as to drink. Our health lessons at school teach us that alcohol is very harmful physically.

Ronald: Phil, don't say such big words. What's physically?

Phyllis: Oh, it means that drinking hurts the body, for everybody knows that alcohol is a drug that numbs the brain and so lessens the control of the muscles.

Marie: What I did not like after the parties was the way the place was left. It did not seem like home with the furniture pushed around every way. Our piano is all marked it. The last party was worse than up where glasses have been set on ever.

Ronald: Why, what happened?

Marie: Maybe I shouldn't tell you.

Gordon: Go on Marie, please.

Marie: Well, two of the men who came to the party were laughing and cutting up when they came in and before I went off to sleep it sounded as if they were shouting at each other angrily.

Ronald: What were they shouting about?

Phyllis: Don't ask so many questions.

Marie: The next morning Mrs. Harris told me that there had been a quarrel. She was upset and said she never wanted any more drinking parties in her home. They had thought that these parties would make people friendly but instead two of the men quarrelled because they had taken liquor.

Gordon: What was the trouble?

Marie: Mr. Harris tried to make peace between the two men but one of them pushed him so that he tripped over a chair and hurt his arm. Of course, they were sorry about it for they never intended to do such a thing.

Phyllis: No wonder Mrs. Harris was upset.

Marie: Yes, she was also worried because Mr. Harris was not able to go to work and he was directing some important secret war work which would be held up because he would not be able to draw the plans.

Ronald: Did he draw plans for airplanes?

Marie: It was secret work so he never talked about it. Mr. Harris is lots of fun, but when I said good bye to him before coming here, I did feel sorry to see him so sad looking with his arm strapped up. He warned me never to have anything to do with drink for it only brought trouble. He said that he was sorry because it was through his example that the two young men had quarrelled. He said also how sorry he was to lose valuable time from work.

Mrs. Goodfellow (entering): You children are quiet in here. What big matter is disturbing your minds?

Ronald: Mother, Marie has been telling us about the big parties they had. They weren't funny either!

Mrs. Goodfellow: What kind of parties do you mean, Marie?

Marie: Well we just got talking about things and how glad I am that you don't have drinking parties here.

Mrs. Goodfellow: Yes, alcohol in drink makes people excited and often causes quarrels. However, you won't have to worry about any more drinking parties at your home, Marie. I've just finished reading a letter from Mrs. Harris and she says that they have both decided they are not going to have any more alcohol drinks in their home. Mr. Harris is now able to go back to work.

Marie: That is good news.

Mrs. Goodfellow: Mr. and Mrs. Harris are very fond of you and miss you. They want you to bring Phyllis with you when you return. They promise you a happy time. I'm sure Phyllis would like the holiday.

Phyllis: I am keen to go. I'll write to them and thank them for asking me to come.

Ronald: Aw Mother, can't I go for a visit, too?

Mrs. Goodfellow: No, I'm afraid not, but you can all go out to the kitchen and sample the cookies I have been making, but remember, boys, only two each!

Gordon: You need be warn the girls too, Mother, for we all like your cookies.

QUESTIONS

1. Name two reasons why drinking alcoholic liquor may cause unhappiness in homes.

2. What reasons did Mr. Harris give when he warned Marie "never to have anything to do with drink?"

Scholars 9 years and under answer question one. Those 10 and 11 years answer both.

LONDON, — (CP) — Alone in London and with only his old-age pension to live on, William Bryant, 74, walked into the side of a bus and was killed, leaving a note which indicated he had a premonition of death. The note said "my six girls emigrated to Canada 20 years ago."

PAIGNTON, England — (CP) — Two Lion cubs born at Devon Zoo have been named Stalin and Churchill.
