Fortune's Fool

BY RAFAEL SABATINI

Lastly she saw the tall white figure of the Duke advancing toward her, his eyes narrowed, a half-smile on his full lips, both hands outstretched in welcome. He moved correctly, with that almost excessive grace that was his own, and he at least showed no sign of the intoxication that marked the guests at the Circian feast. But that afforded her no reassurance. From pale that they had been, her cheeks—her whole body, it seemed to her—had flamed a vivid scarlet. Now it was paling again, paling this time in terror and disgust.

Fascinatedly she watched his grace's advance for a moment. Then incontinently she turned, and fled, with the feelings of one who had looked down for a moment into the pit of hell and drawn back in shuddering horror before being engulfed.

Behind her fell a dead silence of astonishment. It endured whilst you might have counted six. Then a great peal of demonic laughter came like an explosion to drive her fearfully onward.

She reached the hall, darted across this, and across the vestibule, her light silk mantle streaming behind her, and so gained at last the open door, stared at by lackeys, who wondered, but made no attempts to stay her.

Too late came the shout from the pursuing Duke ordering them to bar her way. By then she was already in the courtyard, and running like a hare for the gateway that opened upon the street. Out of this the hackney-coach that had brought her was at that moment slowly rumbling. Panting she overtook it, just as the driver brought it to a halt in obedience to her cry. "To Salisbury Court," she gasped. "Drive quickly!"

She was in, and she had slammed the door as the Duke's lackeys—three of them—ran alongside the vehicle, bawling their commands to stop. She flung half her body through the window on the other side to countermand the order.

"Drive on! Drive quickly, in God's name!"

Had they still been in the courtyard, it is odds that the driver would not have dared proceed. But they were already through the gateway in Whitehall itself, and the coach swung round to the left in the direction of Charing Cross.

Here in the open street the driver could defy the Duke's lackeys, and the latter dared not make any determined attempt to hinder him. The coach rolled on, and Miss Farquharson sank back to breathe at last, to recover from her nameless terror and to regain her calm.

The Duke went back with dragging feet and scowling to be greeted by a storm of derision upon which in more sober mood his guests would have ventured. He attempted to laugh with them, to dissemble the extent to which he had been galled. But he hardly made a success of it, and there was distinct ill-temper in the manner in which he flung himself down into his great chair. Mr. Etheredge, leaning across Miss Howden, laid a white jeweled hand on his friend's arm.

He alone of all the company, although he had probably drunk more deeply than any, showed no sign of intoxication beyond the faint flush about his eyes.

"I warned you," he said, "that the little prude is virtuous, and that she will require much patience. This is your chance to exercise it."

CHAPTER VIII

Mr. Etheredge Advises

Toward midnight, when all the guests but Etheredge had departed, and the candles lighting the disordered room were guttering in their sconces, the Duke sat alone in council with the younger libertine.

The Duke unburdened himself, bitterly and passionately. Etheredge smiled.

"You're a prodigiously ungrateful fellow. You go clumsily to work and then you blame me for the failure of your endeavors. Had you asked me, I could have told you what must happen with a parcel of fools who haven't learnt the art of carrying their wine in decent fashion. Had she arrived at the appointed time, whilst they were still sober, all might have been well. She might have come to share, in part at least, their intoxication, and so she would have viewed their antics through eyes that wine had rendered tolerant and kindly. As it is, you merely offended her by a disgusting spectacle; and that is very far from anything that I advised."

"He that as it may," said the ill-humored Duke, "there is a laugh against me that is to be redeemed. I am for director measures now."

"Director measures?" Etheredge's brows went up. He uttered a musical, scornful laugh. "Is this your patience?"

"A pox on patience..."

"Then she is not for you. Wait a moment, my sweet Bucks. I have no illusions as to what you mean by direct measures. You are probably more sober than I am; but then I am more intelligent than you. Out of my intelligence let me inform your sobriety."

GOOD NEWS For every Car Owner

A New Way to Buy Batteries

Up until recently you have been paying high prices for batteries. There was a sharp reduction in battery prices last fall, led by Exide.

Up until now, getting the battery you want has often been a matter of much inconvenience. Now, Exide is able to announce another step forward.

When you have wanted a particular make of battery, as most car owners do, you have had to hunt out the service station that sold that one make of battery. It has been a fixed rule of the trade that each battery service station sell only one make of battery.

This practice has meant not only inconvenience to you but has been the principal cause of high battery prices.

If a service station can sell but one make of battery, its sales are limited. Limited sales require larger profit per sale if the dealer is to make a reasonable income. This extra expense comes out of your pocket without giving you any additional value.

Therefore, now, Exide has decided to break through the convention of years regarding exclusive service stations.

We have announced to the trade our readiness to sell Exide Batteries to any and all reputable battery dealers.

Go to any service station or dealer in batteries and ask for an Exide for your car. We have done our part to enable him to furnish it to you at a profit to himself. The same holds true of an Exide for your Radio set.

Who Pays for "Free Service?"

Another reform in which Exide is taking the leadership is in doing away with "free service."

You do not get something for nothing in this world; not for long, anyway. For years it has been the practice for service stations to test batteries free, to supply them with distilled water free and to render other kinds of service at less than cost.

Somebody has been paying for this. You have been paying for your own service in advance, in the original price you paid for your battery. You have also been paying for service which was extended free to all makes of batteries, even to those orphan batteries that have no service stations of their own. All this has gone on the price of YOUR battery.

We believe that such practices are relics of a moss-covered past, unjust to the car owner, and unfair to the service station.

Pay for What You Get

We have recommended to all service stations that they charge a reasonable fee for service. Not only is it fair play to the service station, but it is for your own interest in keeping down the purchase price of batteries.

If you find a battery man reluctant to make a charge for servicing your battery (perhaps he has done it free for years) we hope you will insist on his taking a reasonable fee.

When you buy an Exide Battery today you are paying for nothing but the battery. The price is lower than ever before—the quality unchanged.

When you do not need any service, why pay for it hidden in the first price? When you do need service, pay for it at the time. Isn't that reasonable?

So, our policy, which we believe will appeal to all forward looking men and which, we hope, will be followed by other battery manufacturers, is: "Let the battery user get the battery he wants—at a reasonable price—where he prefers to deal, and pay the dealer for service when he gets it."
