The Girl Who Had No Chance

By MARION RUBINCAM

A LIE Chapter 101

"Let me go," Ruth repeated again.

"No!" he whispered. "Kiss me!" The girl struggled again. But her struggles only made him hold her more closely. She felt his lips come nearer hers and she tried to hide from him by burying her face against his shoulder.

And this for the moment satisfied him. She felt his hand rest on her head, and she slipped down to her shoulder, and so slid there an instant.

"You must let me go," she pleaded. And feeling his arms loosen, she pulled away.

But it was only to be caught suddenly again. And Tim kissed her before she could turn away her face.

It was not the sweet affectionate caress she had seen before, when Tim came home to greet Myra. It was the hot impulsive caress of the old days—the days when she and Tim were much in love—when nothing in the world mattered beyond that—when Ruth, through all the hard work and discomfort of the day, had this evening visit to look forward to, and Tim's love to strengthen her when she was discouraged.

For a moment she forgot where she was. It seemed only as though Tim had run up to the big house on Main Street to read a letter, to smoke a cigarette and talk, to put his hand over hers as it lay on the arm of the chair, to tell her sentimental little things as they stood by the fire to say good night. She should be able to hear Mrs. Bellington's footsteps on her way up the stairs—there was always one stair that creaked under even that light little lady's tread.

And Tim kissed her again. But his kiss was different. It was more impulsive, too impulsive. Or was that it? She tried to get away though she still had the feeling that she was at home, and ignorant, and faced with the great task of earning a living, of saving a desperate financial situation, and that this man and his love were the only sweet things in a life of hard and discouraging work, and a fight for existence.

And he kissed her again. And then she knew where she was. And with a sudden rush of clear understanding she remembered what had happened on the white negligee and that her hair was hanging. Her cheeks were scarlet when she looked up.

"Tim, please! You mustn't—" she began. He said something in answer, but she did not hear it. He took both her hands and pulled her over to the couch, and sat down by her. He held both hands in one of his, and he suddenly threw back his head to toss his hair from his forehead.

It was a gesture that used to fascinate Ruth to watch, it was a conqueror's gesture. She waited now, knowing that with his free hand he would smooth back the hair. And he did. And all the old tenderness came back to her.

"Ruth dear—I know, I'll go in a minute, I shouldn't—but I can't help it!" He was elated, exalted, by his little triumph. His eyes were shining, he lacked before—Tim was once more the bright, energetic boy she had adored—he was the Tim of the old days.

It threw its spell over her, the fascination of watching this sudden transformation. A few moments before she had looked at him impersonally, criticising his bent shoulders and drooping head! And he kissed her again, seeing something of this in her eyes.

For one long moment he held her against him. For one long moment Ruth forgot everything in the carress. Then the phone rang. Its sudden buzzing made them both start; it broke the spell. Ruth sprang up, her face white, one hand at her heart.

"Never mind, someone calling. Don't look so scared. Shall I answer?" Tim asked, much calmer than she was.

"Who can it be?" She picked up the receiver. Per "hello" was so weak that she had to repeat it three times before she was heard. Then her face, if possible, grew still whiter.

"Wait a moment," she said into the phone. "It's Myra," she whispered to Tim.

"Yes, hello," she said again into the phone. "What? No, I wasn't asleep. My voice—oh, there's nothing wrong with it. What—is Tim here?"

Wide, frightened blue eyes turned towards the man. He shook his head violently.

"No," she said, obeying his gesture. "What? No, he hasn't been here. But I thought you said he always went out Saturdays—yes, I'd like to see you tomorrow. Come for tea. I'll call up Gabby too, if you want." She was getting control of her voice. "My voice better? Well, I was a little sleepy. Goodnight."

She put the phone back on its table and turned to face the man. "You made me tell a lie," she said furiously. "You made me lie—why didn't you go?"

"I'm going," he said miserably. "I'm sorry, I apologise—that's all I seem to do. But I'm going to telephone you Monday."

Kellogg's Bran is prepared to do one thing—AND DO IT WELL!

Kellogg's Bran will permanently relieve constipation, mild or chronic. It is scientifically prepared for that purpose. It is ALL BRAN, therefore it has the necessary bulk to assure results. Food with a small bran content cannot afford permanent relief.

When your physician or friends advise you to eat Kellogg's Bran, you follow-on for the purpose of eliminating a dangerous clogging-up and toxic condition of your system. You can't afford to take half-way measures! Think of the best time and the dangers of illness you are daily dodging!

What you must have is real bran—KELLOGG'S BRAN, and if you will eat it regularly each day you will become a different person within a week or so. Kellogg's Bran, with its natural bulk, sweeps, cleanses and purifies. It not only gives relief, but it regulates the bowels. Every member of your family should eat it every day—at least two tablespoonfuls; in chronic cases as much with each meal.

Try Kellogg's Bran mixed with a hot cereal, or cook it with hot cereals, adding two tablespoonfuls of Bran for each portion. Other popular ways are to sprinkle Kellogg's Bran on hot or cold cereals or to eat it as a cereal with hot milk. You can make delicious bakery products with Kellogg's Bran. Recipes on every package.

Kellogg's Bran is not only nationally sold in grocery stores, but can be had in individual packages in first-class hotels and clubs. Ask for it at your restaurant. Be certain to eat Kellogg's Bran daily for health's sake!

Deed of Kindness Makes Adventurer Heir to Millions

LONDON, May 29.—The story of former interpreter at the Bow street police court being made the heir to a vast fortune by an American woman, who made a will in his favour four months after meeting him in a Rome hotel, has just been made public here.

Captain H. L. Zeitun, a modern soldier of fortune, is said to have had this stroke of luck. He is said to be the beneficiary in an amount estimated at as much as £3,000,000 under the will of Mrs. Julia Stone Wood Davies, daughter of Dr. William Stone Davies, a banker of Missouri. Dr. Davies died about eight years ago.

Zeitun, who is an undischarged bankrupt, says that it and when he actually comes into possession of the money his first care will be to repay his creditors with interest. In his fifty years of life he has met with adventures in many parts of the world. By turns he has been soldier, inventor, merchant and secretary. Much of his youth was spent, his friends understand, in the Orient, and in his younger days he is said to have inherited and spent several fortunes.

In January of last year he was in Rome and there met the woman who subsequently made him the beneficiary under her will. Seized with illness and a stranger in Italy, when Zeitun proffered his services, secured for the sick woman the best possible medical attention and saw her nursed back to health and strength. Grateful for his services, she offered him a post as her secretary and four months later when in London made two wills in his favour.

How the will was made was told tonight by Henry Dollman of the firm of First and Company, Chancery Lane, who was instructed to prepare the documents. Dollman said that Mrs. Davies had told him that she was a millionaire.

"She was staying at the Savoy Hotel, where she occupied a big suite of rooms," said Dollman. "She said that apart from certain charitable bequests to St. Dunstan's and other institutions and to hospitals, she wished to leave all her money to Captain Zeitun, and I drew up two wills accordingly. It seems that she had become estranged from her husband, for she expressly stated that she wished him to be cut out of her will."

"I heard of Mrs. Davies' death, which I believe took place on December 11 of last year, we entered a caveat at Somerset House against any one taking steps to prove another will.

"I have heard that the widower of Mrs. Davies intends to contest the two wills in Captain Zeitun's favor, and that the matter will be fought out in the Missouri courts. I understand that most of Mrs. Davies' property was in America, and I have heard it stated that the total value of her estate may be about £3,000,000.

"Personally I have no knowledge of what property she has in England but I have been told by Captain Zeitun that there is about £45,000 lying at a bank. It was necessary for Mrs. Davies to make two wills, there had to be one in respect of her property in England and another in respect of all the property she owned outside the country."

Zeitun interviewed by The Daily Chronicle, after referring to his meeting with Mrs. Davies in Rome said: "As her secretary I had an agreement for three years at a salary of £100 a month. After she went back to America I heard nothing from her except two messages. One was a wireless from the ship and the other was just an ordinary friendly letter."

LETTER OF CONDOLENCE To Brother Daniel Ross:—We, the Officers and Members of E. J. O'Brien's Post, Borden, wish to convey to you our sincere sympathy in the loss you have sustained in the death of your late father. Whilst deploring the sad visitation which has come to you, yet it is gratifying to know that he has but a short time previous to ourselves participated in the journey which we all shall have to make from the shores of Time to the peaceful realm of Eternity. It is the consolation that no more physical suffering must have to be endured, that bodily infirmities are at an end, and that a new and brighter existence has begun. In time of affliction such as yours, we realize that human sympathy is shallow and of but little worth. We therefore commend you to a merciful Providence who has said, I will not leave you comfort-less. I will come again that where I am there you may be also. With assurance of our warmest esteem, we remain on behalf of our brethren.

CHAMBERLAIN RAPS BALDWIN

LONDON, May 28.—In a letter to his constituents, Austen Chamberlain complains that no opportunity was given to him or his colleagues in the late Government to make a contribution to Conservative party unity. No communication from Stanley Baldwin was made to him before Mr. Baldwin had formed his ministry. Had his (Chamberlain's) help been asked it would have been gladly given.

There was not one of his colleagues who would not have been willing to sacrifice any claims in order to secure such re-union of the Conservative party. Mr. Chamberlain adds that he cannot but believe that Mr. Baldwin had the same wish for the oblivion of past difficulties and complete union of the party for the future but it would seem, he writes, that other forces intervened.

He continues: "If complete re-union has not been established it is not any unwillingness on our part to forget past differences or to any pretensions on the part of any one of us that his inclusion in any new combination was essential."

Incidentally Mr. Chamberlain terms Bonar Law's resignation not only a personal tragedy, but a great national misfortune.

CANADIAN ADMITS HE WAS RUM CONSPIRATOR BOSTON, May 29.—David Perlo of Montreal, and James Costello, of Montreal, two of five persons indicted by the federal grand jury here for conspiring to land liquor in connection with the rum running operations of Block Island, of the British steamer Avontown, and other smaller craft, surrendered today, pleading not contendere and were fined $1,500 each.

Costello's appearance was the first in this city since federal officers sought him unsuccessfully in a raid of his Brighton apartments where they took into custody his wife, Mrs. Della Costello, Harry Robinson and Alexander Goldberg, both of Montreal. The latter three are also under indictment for the same offence.

NEW WATCH ON RHINE BINGEN-ON-THE-RHINE, May 29.—Prosper pilots in blue from the Seine have taken the romance out of certain German fairy stories of the Middle Ages, and shattered legends of the Rhine which have stood for many centuries. The mysterious currents of the Lorelei, famed in song and story, and in Germany as well known almost as Old Father Rhine himself, have been conquered by the French without a struggle.

When the French and Belgian occupation of the Ruhr began scores of grizzled German boatmen who steered powerful tugs and trailing barges through the treacherous channel which swirls about the great rock of Lorelei, quit their jobs at once as part of Berlin's passive resistance.

Thereupon, persevering Frenchmen looked over the task ahead of them. Boats on the river must be kept going and coming as part of the occupation programme. None of these pilots from France had ever heard of King Rhine's fairy daughter, of her golden hair and silvery voice which charmed all navigators so that their boats were smashed against the rocks and their bodies washed away to fairyland. Therefore they could go to work unhampered.

Modern methods were quickly applied by the Frenchmen. The river's depths were taken, tricks of the channel were recorded, and

Worth Its Price

"We have cheaper teas, madam, but I think you'll find 'KING COLE' is worth its price." So said a wise grocer recently to a questioning customer. He was there merely to serve her, but to serve her well.

He might please her purse with the cheap article but her final judgment of his service would be on the quality of the tea supplied. He wanted a satisfied customer.

This was one of the many merchants using "KING COLE TEA" in their own homes and so he could say with sincerity "It is worth the price."
