MRS. ANNIE TRAINOR

The funeral of the late Mrs. Peter Trainor whose death, on April 15th, 1934, has been recorded in The Guardian, took place on Tuesday morning, 17th to St. Joseph Church, Kelly's Cross. Despite the almost impossible condition of the roads, the attendance of her many relatives, friends and strangers, spoke eloquently of the place the deceased held in the esteem of the residents of the community.

The late Mrs. Trainor, whose maiden name was Annie Haughey, the daughter of the late John Haughey and Sarah Kelly, was born on June 11th, 1854, and was married in the year 1876 to the late Peter Trainor, Maplewood, who predeceased her. A brief sketch—like this notice, very inadequately outlines the many estimable traits of the deceased, as a dutiful loving daughter, a faithful wife, and a mother whose ambition in this life was to bring up her large family in the fear and love of God. Her wide circle of relatives and friends all deeply mourn her passing, in which she ever pointed the way to her sons and daughters, but, most essential of all, led the way.

Now that she has gone from this world to a better place, the reward for a life of hard work and good deeds, both to her own and her neighbors, her bereaved family, who knew so well her worth, feel, indeed, the loss of their greatest friend on earth.

She leaves to cherish an unblemished memory, five sons and four daughters, thirty-one grandchildren, and a host of great-grandchildren. The sons are, Mark, Anthony, and Charles in Saskatchewan, John E. and Horace in Maplewood. The daughters are, Mrs. M. A. Smith, Mrs. J. W. McKenna, Mrs. J. W. Bradley and Mrs. F. J. Flood. Requiem High Mass was sung by the pastor, Rev. J. C. Pire, who also performed the sad rites in the cemetery.

The pall bearers were—Harold McManus, Matthias Malone, Gerald Nantes, John Trainor, George Duffy, Leo Flood.

May her soul rest in peace.

Trinidad Postman Establishes Church

LA BREA, Trinidad, April 21.—(C.P.)—Egbert McDonald, a Mayaro postman, has just established a church in the Trinidad Postman's religious property.

After singing "For They're a Jolly Good Fellowship" the party engaged in games and contests. Refreshments were served by the ladies and all wended their way home feeling they had spent an enjoyable evening.

CENTENARIAN ENJOYS LIFE

LONDON, April 20.—Meet the centenarian with the school girl complexion—Mrs. Sarah Guy, of Freegrove Rd., Holloway, who celebrated her 103 birthday recently.

In addition to possessing a creamy complexion which many a young girl might envy, Mrs. Guy is unlike the majority of her generation.

She, like the modern girl, she does not object to lipstick, rouge, powder, silk stockings, long skirts, short skirts or even shorts for sports. She reads a minimum of six or seven a week. She walks up and downstairs by herself. She retains her passion for whist. And she has no formula for old age. "I go to bed late and get up early—I like it," she says.

Brothers Meet After 47 Years

NORTH SYDNEY, N. S., April 20.—(Canadian Press)—A story of how two brothers had met in Nelson, B. C., without knowing each other until they were introduced is told in a letter received here from Duncan Johnstone, a former Cape Bretoner, who recently visited his old home.

The brothers, Duncan and Daniel Johnstone, left Harnochs, C. B., and went west together. They helped clear the land where the Vancouver post office now stands, and then operated a logging camp in British Columbia until the Yukon gold rush, when they separated. Duncan following the trail of the auriferous prospector into the gold fields, and Daniel going into the interior. They did not meet again for 47 years.

In then Duncan has resided at Whitehorse, Alaska, and before coming to his old-home in Cape Breton he went to Nelson, B. C., where his brother lives, and they met, neither recognizing the other. After being "introduced" they swapped stories of their experiences.

In his letter, Mr. Johnstone said he was confident the gold and silver mining industry in the North will boom in the near future.

CENTRAL GUARDIAN WOULD FORM MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS DEPT.

The superiority of Tasmanian yachting and yachtsmen was once more demonstrated in Sydney this year when Tasias Too—the third of the famous Tasias—won the Interstate contest for the valuable cup presented by Lord Foster, a former Governor-General of the Commonwealth, for 21st, restricted class yachts. The first race for the cup was held in 1922, and since it first competed in 1925 Tasmania has won seven times, despite the fact that no boat was entered in 1932.

Potential Champion

Competent judges of the game consider that one of the most promising of Australia's younger school of cricketers is C. L. Badcock, the champion Tasmanian batsman. Badcock, who is not yet 20 years of age, has been making century scores in district and Interstate cricket for the last three or four years, and has also performed impressively against touring international teams. This season he has made centuries on Tasmania against Victoria on three occasions, including a score of 274 at Launceston, and it was on the strength of these displays that he was selected as a member of the Australian team which was to have visited New Zealand. He has received a number of offers to transfer to one of the mainland States, and it is likely that before next year he will go to South Australia, whose cricket will also be enriched by the presence of Bradman, the world's champion batsman.

NEW YORK EXCHANGE

By John L. Cooley, Associated Press Finance Writer

NEW YORK, April 21.—(Associated Press)—Stocks rallied in the last hour today after a featureless session during the earlier part of the day. Volume expanded to 1,911,320 shares, the best since Feb. 26, thanks largely to the late revival of buying interest.

With United States dollars declining and commodity prices firm, stock traders doubtless thought their market was entitled to become more aggressive on the upside, especially since it had been able to over several months and it is proposed to include interstates which will induce interstate and overseas visitors to come to Adelaide.

Proposals for marking the centenary of the completion of the International Highway, and the construction of a bituminized highway between Adelaide and Mt. Gambier. The great road would link up with sections which have been constructed westward from Melbourne, and make the Prince's Highway connecting the two capitals a first-class motor way. Those with an eye to beauty have suggested the planting of avenues of trees in towns throughout the State. Two suggestions put forward for attracting visitors to the holding of an international speed boat race on the River Murray, and a motor race on the lines of the Monte Carlo event.

The State's Centenary

Although South Australia will not celebrate the Centenary of her proclamation until 1936, plans are afoot. The celebrations will extend over several months and it is proposed to include interstates which will induce interstate and overseas visitors to come to Adelaide.

MARKETING BILL ATTACKED

(C.P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

OTTAWA, April 20.—The House of Commons had another field day today on the Government marketing bill with Liberal opposition. The bill was introduced by the Conservative, Franklin W. Turnbull, of Regina, came to its defence during the afternoon sitting.

The Government's appeal to the people before enacting such radical legislation, insisted William H. Moore, Liberal, Ontario, former chairman of the Tariff Board. The bill was socialist in character and the Conservatives had not been elected on such a platform.

"I am going to say in all fairness," said the former tariff board chairman, "this government should have a mandate from the people before effecting such a violent change in the economic life of this country."

A plea for the Liberals to co-operate with the Government and pass the bill without delay came from the Regina Conservative. It was designed to provide machinery for the orderly marketing of goods, and was a attempt to solve, in some degree, the problem of distribution.

Other Liberals who attacked the bill were John Wallace and Edward Young, both from Saskatchewan.

Death Ends Link With Fever Year

(By John Mosher)

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

(By The Canadian Press)

SAINT JOHN, N.B. April 21.—Looking eastward over the Atlantic from the mouth of Saint John harbor, a gleaming Celtic cross on Partridge Island marks the burial ground for hundreds of immigrants whose tragic death formation one of the most ghastly chapters in Ireland's history. After a lapse of nearly 87 years since the death of Robert Tyner, in 1847, the year that had been a link with the plague of 1947, Tyner, who died here this month, was believed to be the last survivor of those fever-stricken passengers who sought health and homes in a new world.

More fortunate than scores of infants who died aboard ship, Tyner came safely through the gauntlet of disease and destitution when he was a year old. In 1927 he took a prominent part at the unveiling of the memorial on Partridge Island where harrowing scenes reminiscent of London's great plague had been daily occurrences 80 years previously. A fund collected by public subscription from people of Irish descent in Saint John enabled erection of the Celtic cross commemorating a kinkof catastrophe.

Although the thin soil of Partridge Island claimed many victims of the "fever year" counts as one of the most fertile of the Maritime Provinces in addition to a multitude of unfortunate whose homes are scattered on the ocean bed along the way from Ireland.

Death and emigration depleted the population of the Emerald Isle by more than two million in 1947. Successive crop failures completely a wholesale exodus from the impoverished homeland, and out of the throngs bound for Saint John alone more than two thousand starved amid squalid conditions on overcrowded ships, were committed to the deep or buried on Partridge Island.

A food shortage steadily increasing the tide of emigration in the early forties reached its climax in 1947 following almost complete failure of the previous year's potato crop. Starvation and disease, typhus and death were the result. The famine extended even to the highlands of Scotland. Coupled with the fever, it spread more rapidly than could be expected from the outside world, and the stricken people saw no other alternative than fleeing the land of their birth.

What Every Widow Knows

windows and covered chairs and sofas. Delicate pinks and blue and mauves on a creamy background and every inch of the blue sofa filled with early dahlia.

She became aware of the hum of electric fans that the nurses had placed on the floor at either side of the bed to try to make breathing easier for their patient. Then an arm took hers and guided her toward the alcove.

"Here she is, Mrs. Rogers," a quiet voice said.

Molly's brown eyes blurred with sudden tears. And through the blur she caught a glimpse of a bent head lifting slowly, darning dark eyes looking searching toward her, a lip parted, a gasp, and an impatient little hand beckoning toward her.

She had expected Kerry's mother to look very old. But Kerry's mother, even though she was dying, was still looking at her with the same hair like Kerry's—clear, white skin—also like Kerry's—but that was all that was like Kerry. The rest was Mrs. Rogers herself.

"Come here, Mrs. Rogers' wife," she panted.

Ker hardness and her brightness made Molly think of that spray of loose sweet berries in Kerry's own room.

Canadian Alfalfa

Most of the alfalfa seed grown in Canada is required for domestic consumption and usually the domestic demand absorbs the crop even in years of heavy production. The average annual production over the past five years has been about 2,000,000 pounds, and the consumption approximately the same. Having due regard to the great popularity of the alfalfa crop in Canada, and the possibility of further expansion as a forage crop, it would appear to be no immediate danger of an overproduction of the seed.
