TIMELY NOTES ON TOPICS CONNECTED WITH Silver Fox and Mink Farming

The Leningrad Fur Auction has been a tremendous success with vast quantities of furs changing hands. Chibber from there to New York state that white fox was sold at 16% below contract prices for previous buys by the United States furriers. There was strong competition for muskrat on the $3.00 basis with a smaller size selling for $2.50. Kamchatka red fox brought a top price of $15.50. This is the finest red fox in the world and the skins are very large. The best Yakutsky red fox brought $9.00. Other sections of poor grade reds were neglected. London was the main buyer. Oranburg white fitch sold on a basis of $5.50 and black fitch on a basis of $4.50. Both articles going to American buyers. The Russian sable sale was strong with American buyers buying the better grades. Bargain sables, which means the area in which the best sables are obtained, brought a top price of $25.00 per skin. Better grades were bought by American representatives with London buyers taking the lower grades.

A report received by the Hudson's Bay Company, London, stated that lynx, wolverine, blue fox and muskrat 100% sold. Red fox 40% sold, cross fox 80% sold, white fox 55% sold. White fox very cheap. $18. Basis being paid for best sections with demand limited. Strong competition for muskrat. Official French license permits the purchase of long-haired and dyed furs only.

Women's Wear Daily, New York, summing up the Leningrad sale has the following: "While a number of trade sources here either stated they were 'surprised' or 'disappointed' at the high prices realized at the Leningrad Fur Auction, several leading dealers yesterday asserted the levels established may set the pattern for the New York market during the coming months. The sale, the world's largest, the Russian auction, servicing as a barometer for dealers here, Jesse Fisch of Brenner Bros. declared. Now we know what furs are wanted and at what price."

The low prices for silver foxes which still continue should not stop any rancher from keeping to his regular routine. Silver foxes require a great deal of attention and they are particularly prone to parasitic diseases. If on looking over your fox pups you find some that are not thrifty—that is not growing as well or looking as well as you would expect—the cause is probably parasites, either hookworms or round worms. These can both be eliminated by the use of Ivermectin capsules, eight capsules for the smaller pups and 16 for the larger pups. At the same time that you are dosing with capsules you should treat the ears for earmites whether you notice them or not. There are several earmite ointments on the market which are procurable at drug stores and other places. They all have merit.

You should also examine the foxes for fleas and if they have any fleas use one of the reliable brands of flea powder which is easily procurable. Whatever the cause of the problem, you would not say it is too promising at present — you will always receive a better price for a well cared for fox of good color and good fur quality than you will for a mediocre one. This is the trying time, or one may say the testing time for every rancher, and no matter how much discouragement there is it should not prevent him from using our utmost endeavor to produce good quality foxes.

From time to time we read of new ways of saving money in ranching foxes. In this connection we are pleased to give a summary of an article just received from Dr. Charles F. Bassett of the U.S. Fur Animal Experiment Station, Saratoga Springs, New York, entitled, "The Comparative Value of Poultry Waste And Horse Meat For Feeding Mink." While mink alone is mentioned, there is no question whether poultry waste is equally valuable for foxes and where procurable at a reasonable price can be used as indicated by Dr. Bassett.

Poultry waste is rapidly assuming a position of importance as a diet ingredient in the feeding of ranch-raised mink. Within the past two years many mink ranchers have begun using it as a substitute for horse meat in their rations. For various reasons horse meat which has long been the standby for ranchers, is becoming a scarce and expensive product. The amount of poultry waste available for use in mink feed, on the other hand, should increase in amount in the years to come, since the amount of poultry marketed in recent years, barring minor fluctuations, has increased rather than declined in both numbers and total weight. This total weight of heads, feet and entrails accumulating at a modern poultry dressing plant in a single day represents a vast amount of food if it is all utilized.

W.C.T.U. NOTES

WE HAVE "CONTROL" NOW

The apologists for the liquor industry have a saying: "Liquor Control, not prohibition, would solve the liquor problem." We have just that, Liquor Control, a control by liquor. It is even invading our churches in its attempt to dominate our national life. . . . If we ever expect to change existing conditions the Sunday School must be used to its fullest extent to teach total abstinence. All other organizations coming into contact with youth should be enlisted to promote total abstinence education. The public must be aroused to the menace of the creeping giant, the liquor traffic.

It is high time that we realize that we cannot get help from the children. The future is in the hands of the children, whom we must teach total abstinence. — P. E. Selby.

A CHALLENGE TO PARENTS J. Edgar Hoover, Director F. B. I. "The church is the most necessary institution in our way of life. Its influence for good is far-reaching. It is essential to the opinion for the youth of our nation to receive its benefits. Early religious training to infuse proper moral concepts in the minds of our youth is an absolute necessity. Neither the laws of God nor the laws of man can be fully understood and respected unless the reasons for such laws are constantly explained and taught to the young of our nation. The Sunday school offers much to the young people of America. Here worthwhile friendships are made and character-building is nurtured. The lessons of common decency which should be first taught in the home are enriched in the environment of the Sunday school. As an instrument for good, it is eliminating the selfishness, greed, moral instability and a score of other vicious influences which tend to lure youth on the road to crime. Parents cannot afford to deprive their children of this splendid influence. It is imperative that America take advantage of every avenue that will assist in teaching alert, vigorous, wide-awake Americanism.

"The church and the Sunday school are a part of American community life, and their character-building advantages cannot be discounted. Parents are urged to postpone their use until tomorrow. Tomorrow may be too late."

WHEN "EAT LESS" MEANS "DRINK MORE"

A thing that shakes one's faith in some who are promoting plans for food conservation is their reluctance to distillers and brewers. These tradesmen, who are not the nation's grain stock, but the transformers of its nutritious qualities to those of destruction. The fact is, they never have had a more appropriate for display across every brewery and distillery in the land as "eat less." That is a slogan to which those who brew a distillate grain into booze are faithful.

It has been a pretty effective slogan, too. They have seen that fathers and mothers and little children of the nation have eaten less because the distillers and brewers planned things so that the breadwinner would drink more.

Therefore when Chairman Charles Luckman of the Citizens Food Committee announces that these agents who impoverish the hand of the worker by the use of the empty cup are doing a very magnificent thing by reducing grain consumption in whole or in part for a time, let no one mislead — The Christian Advocate.

Wisdom's Gate

By Margaret Ayer Barnes
CHAPTER XXII

Well — will he be late? Cicily was wondering, when she heard the doorbell. Then she heard Vesta walking down the hall. The front door opening, Jack's voice distinctly audible, shatteringly familiar, rising compositely on a note of inquiry, "Is Mrs. Lancaster at home?" She had barely time to commend the composure, with that name on his lips, before he stood in the doorway. The same old Jack — almost. A little harder and heavier. The same plain face, unobscured, bright-eyed, now tanned a reddish brown. Some grey in his hair. New lines about his mouth. The eyes were crinkling up with pleasure at the sight of her.

"Well, Cicily!" he said, extending both his hands. She clasped them delightedly. "Why, Jack, you look fine!" She regretted her unconscious accent of surprise, but he only laughed at it. "You look all right, yourself." Holding her at arm's length, he took her all in. "In fact you look marvelous."

He released her hands, not at all self-consciously. He stood for a moment looking around the room, his eyes quick and interested. "Funny," he said, "it seems to me small. But all the East does that. It continually surprises me. He strolled over to the fireplace. "Did you like China?" "Oh, very much." She sat down at her tea table. "Will you have a cup of tea? Or maybe a cocktail. They're over at Mumma's. But before they come in."

"I want to tell you he interrupted heartily. "That I think they're extraordinary. It simply bowled me over how glad they were to see me. I hadn't expected it. I thought they'd be shy. Of course it's all your doing — the kind of kids they are. So eager and natural and friendly and intelligent."

"How did John seem to you?" asked Cicily abruptly. "What did you talk about?" "I thought he was charming — sensitive, obedient, — delightfully serious. Why — what's the matter? I mean, is anything? You're not worried about him?"

"It's rather," sighed Cicily. "That's what's worried about her. The situation troubles him."

"What situation?" he asked after a moment. It seemed with reluctance. "Yours and mine," she said simply. Jack's expression, by this time, was wholly bewildered. But relief had seeped into it. "Would you mind telling me?" he asked "what you're talking about?" "I'm talking about John's attitude."
