ASHES of ROSES
 A Romance of Today
 By Joanna Cannan

When everyone had gone past, he opened the door behind him, which was locked on the inside, and the two fugitives stepped out into the yard. They threatened their way between the cars which were standing there and found the entrance which gave on a narrow, shabby street. At the end of the street shone the sea. They walked quickly towards it and came out on the promenade, a hundred yards westward of the front entrance to the hotel. Geoffrey looked back and saw that people were only just beginning to trickle out in peaceful twos and threes on the promenade. He heaved a sigh of relief, slackened his pace and looked down at the girl beside him. His heart leaped. Now, and at late last, he was alone with her.

"This is splendid," he said. "You are laughing. She had a very pretty laugh; it was sudden, spontaneous, musical and enchantingly young. 'It was fun escaping like that,' she said. 'But I don't think we ought to have done it. Supposing your father wants you for anything.'"

"Well, he couldn't expect to find me in all that crowd," said Geoffrey. "Besides, I can't think of anything he could want me for. I should only have got hung up strolling on the front and wasting half the afternoon. Look, do you see that headland at the end of the prom? We've got to get round that and another one. Will you be tired?"

"Good gracious, no. I can walk for miles." "You don't look as if you could, somehow. You look as if . . . as if a breath of wind would blow you away. I hope it won't, though. It's so marvellous of you to come with me."

"Well, come said she didn't mind about the bathing. She's promised to teach Mr. Turner some sort of dive. It was awfully nice of her. She's an awfully nice girl, don't you think?" "Awfully."

"It's jolly having a friend like that in the office. In the other office I was in, there wasn't anybody I wanted to be friends with." "Don't let's talk about the office," said Geoffrey. "Do you know, if I hadn't seen you there, I wouldn't be able to imagine you in one. You look as if you'd just stepped out of some lovely old-fashioned country garden full of flowers and things."

"I do love flowers," Fay admitted. "I love arranging them. I think they like me too because they always last so long for me. Do you know, if you bang the bottoms of the stalks with a hammer or something, you can make them last much longer. I read about it once, so I tried it. It worked beautifully. A fellow I know gave me some yellow carnations once and they lasted for a month."

"Black despair, like a pall, descended upon Geoffrey." "What sort of a fellow is he?" "Just a fellow I met at a dance once. A brother of a girl I know." "Do you like him?" "Not much. He's all right, but rather old-fashioned."

That was better, thought Geoffrey. "It was cheek of him to send you flowers, though," he said aloud. "O I don't think he meant it to be," Fay said casually. "It's an old-fashioned sort of idea isn't it?" The sun shone again. "That is where we turn down on to the beach," said Geoffrey. "Take care, it's rather steep." He wanted, but did not dare, to help her down. The tide had begun to fall and they walked along the sand. On one side of them the tall chalk cliffs stood up like towers, dazzlingly white against the unclouded sky; on the other, bright and glittering in the prosperous sunshine, the sea stretched to the horizon's fainter blue. Fay took off her hat and swung it as she walked along. Presently they came to Dereham Cove. The cliffs stand back from the shore there, and at their lowest point wooden steps lead up them to a footpath which winds away up a broad valley lying in the heart of the downs. Fay and Geoffrey went up the steps, turned aside from the path, and walked up to the summit of the headland, where they sat down to rest. It was very quiet there, and they were all alone. The afternoon lights were growing softer, the sea was hazy, and a golden haze lay over the broad and friendly downs. Occasionally the shadow of a soaring sea-gull crossed the short grass of the headland; from far below came the slow splash of the sea. Other sounds and movements there were none; even the lively smell of the sea had given way to the sweet, warm smell of thyme.

BELFAST

Mrs. Ronald MacRae, Point Prim, has arrived home after a very pleasant and well-earned vacation with her daughters and other relatives and friends in the U. S. A.

The Y. P. S. of Belle River United Church put on their play "What happened in June" in the Belfast public hall on Tuesday, Nov. 29th, before a large and very appreciative audience who spoke very highly of the play, the actors and the entertainment in general. They are planning to play a couple of evenings yet taking advantage of the roads while cars can run. A neat sum was realized.

Church services on Sunday were comparatively large. At St. John's morning service the pastor Rev. D. L. Griffiths took as his text "Enoch walked with God" preaching a very powerful and instructive sermon. At the United Church in the afternoon the pastor Rev. J. R. Skinner preached from the text "Seeing the Multitude." The Rev. gentleman preached what might be termed as an introductory sermon to a series that he intends to preach on that greatest sermon ever preached—the Sermon on the Mount—and on each beatitude separately. Mrs. J. J. Larabee, theologian, being absent her place was filled by Mrs. Joseph Robertson.

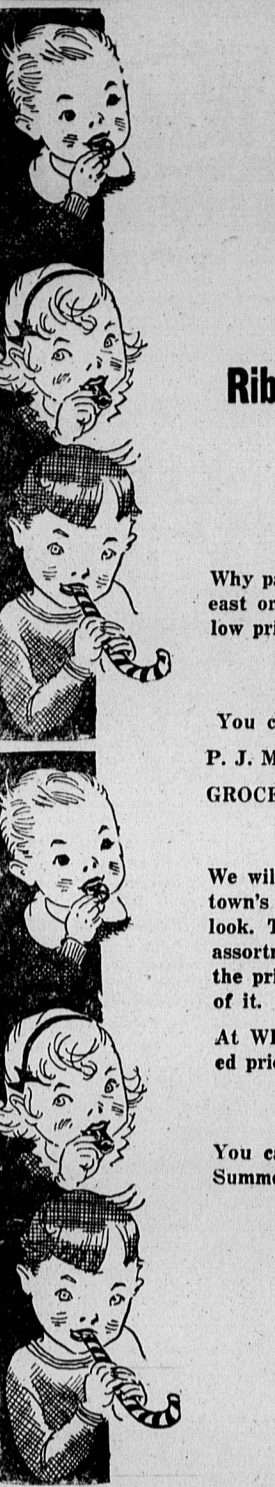

Word has recently been received from California of the death of Malcolm Martin who died there after an illness of one day. He was sixty seven years of age. He was a brother of Mr. Martin of Southport and the late Mr. Angus E. Martin of Mt. Buchanan. The same dispatch contained the news of the death of his sister Kate Ann who died from the result of an accident. She was a widowed lady and the writer has not her correct name at the time of writing. News has also been received by friends here of the death in Chicago of Capt. Donald MacRae. In early life he was a sea captain and in later years was employed by the Edison Electric Co., in Chicago. The late Capt. MacRae was born at Ponds, Pinnet, about eighty years ago. He was one of the successful Islanders abroad in every sense of the word but there was no place he liked better to spend his vacation than at his old home on P. E. I. and always did so while his health allowed him. He had an unusually pleasing personality and neighbors and friends always benefited by his visits. His wife predeceased him some years ago. He is survived by one daughter Dr. Florence who practices medicine in Chicago and several sisters and brothers to whom sympathy is expressed at the present. Mr. Alex. D. MacRae, Pinnet Bridge is a brother of the deceased.

The Eldon United Mission Band held their annual meeting at the home of Mrs. J. G. Frizzell on Sunday evening, Dec. 4th. A good attendance was present but owing to whooping cough still around it was not a full meeting. The officers for the coming year are as follows: Pres. Mrs. J. F. Halliday; vice pres. Mrs. Lea Frizzell; sec'y. Alice Halliday; treas. Kathryn MacLeod.

Owing to the whooping cough being still in the district the concert that was planned is postponed indefinitely. A social evening is to be held at the Hall day home on Friday evening, Dec. 16th and the jun-a romantic sort of place. The village down there in the trees is all thatched cottages with diamond panes in the windows and hollyhocks in the gardens . . . the sort of place for a . . . honeymoon. I'm awfully glad you like it too." Fay looked down at the village, so hidden in the trees that only the top of the square church tower and the long brown barns of an outlying farmhouse could be seen. "London's horrid in the summer, isn't it?" "Beastly. But doesn't it seem far away now? London . . . and the office . . . and never being able to talk to you . . . like another life, and years ago, it seems. How funny to think we shall have to go back there tomorrow. It seems much more real to be sitting on the grass here with you."

"You are a funny boy." "Funny? Why?" "I don't know. You seem so funny and pleased to be here." "Good lord," said Geoffrey. "If you'd spent jolly nearly a fortnight wondering if you'd ever get a chance to be alone with someone and thinking that you never possibly could, and then it had suddenly happened and you were all alone in the most wonderful place with her, wouldn't you be pleased?" "Fay did not answer him. She picked up her hat which was lying on the grass between them, pulled it on her head and arranged her curls. "I expect we ought to be getting back, now," she said briskly. (To be Continued.)

ors are looking forward to a pleasant time.

Friends of Mrs. John Gillis, Flat River, will be sorry to learn that she is suffering from a broken wrist as the result of accidentally falling downstairs in her home recently. All join in wishing for her a speedy recovery.

John C. MacDonald, Point Prim, is receiving treatment for a bad attack of blood poisoning in the hand. His many friends hope his indisposition will only be temporary.

The regular weekly meeting of the Y. P. S. of St. John's Presbyterian Church was held in the Church hall on Thursday, Dec. 1st as usual. There was a splendid attendance and a profitable meeting. The leader for the evening was Mrs. John Gillis who gave a very instructive paper on the topic missionary work among the Bhils. Anything with reference to the Bhil field is always interesting to the society as Dr. John Howie who so pleasingly filled the pulpit in St. John's for one summer is laboring in that field and sends pleasing reports of his work there to his Belfast friend from time to time. The usual business of the meeting was carried on and the regular choir practice followed. The choir is particularly faithful at these practices and the good result is shown at the Sunday services.

The young people of the Y. P. S. of St. John's Church, who worked so faithfully to put over the concert that was held in the Belfast public hall on Wednesday evening, Dec. 7th, can truly say that Labor has such rewards. The pastor, Rev. D. L. Griffiths presided and in his usual jovial manner made a few opening remarks blended with occasional wit and humor. All through the program there was not a dull moment. When the curtain came up for the opening chorus Men of Harlech a full choir almost filled the large stage and with the grand old Union Jack as a background they certainly did sing. Space does not permit and a full list of the numbers on the program will be found elsewhere but—a few numbers can bear just a word. A Gaelic solo by Alex. K. MacKenzie was a miss but it was substituted by a solo in Welsh by the chairman having one word in it that sounded Gaelic. His encore was written about the citizens of Eldon and literally brought down the house. Mrs. McEachern's reading about the auction sale of bachelors was a sure cure for the blues. Any schools that may be on the verge of closing for want of pupils may only consider it temporary. The solos and duets were all pleasingly rendered, the bachelor singing with the borrowed coat showed the audience that popping the question to a dame dressed as an antique can sound just as spicy as to the modern girl. The help given by the Y. P. S. of Wood Island was thoroughly enjoyed and added greatly to the program. The warm welcome given the German and his friends goes to show that the League of Nations is reaching its objective. The instrumental music had only one fault—not enough of it—but come again Wood Island. The chairman reported a splendid sum received at the door and a correct amount will appear later. Good order prevailed through the evening. The hall being comfortably heated not every town can boast of having a Mayor that will look after the heating of the town hall. A vote of thanks moved by the President of the Y. P. S. and seconded by the Past President was tendered the young people of Wood Island and when put to the house was signified by hearty applause. After the chairman had thanked the audience for their patronage all joined in the National Anthem. Miss Annie MacRae and Miss Florence MacPhee were the accompanists for the evening.

The death occurred recently at San Rafael, California, of Flora, wife of Capt. Neil Murchison. The deceased was a sister of Miss Katie Murchison who taught in several schools in the Belfast district. Capt. Murchison is a brother of Mrs. Hugh Gillis, Eldon, and Mr. Jas. D. Murchison, Point Prim.

The Eldon hockey club are preparing for good clean sport this winter and are getting an open rink under way. About twenty five young men have already subscribed to its upkeep and have made a start on the construction work. We hope they will be ready for Jack Frost when he arrives as he is a necessary asset to the cause. The rink is near Eldon village and we hope to see many of the fair sex don skates this winter as they are always very pleasant company in the sporting line.—E.
