PLANNING

Information from persons desiring specific information on the effect of the Canada-United States trade agreement on certain individual items of trade and of workings of the agreement in general.

Because of a statement in the treaty that it becomes effective Jan. 1, 1936, and that it must be ratified by the King in respect of the Dominion some confusion arose in the public mind, as indicated in communications to the government.

Washington Agreement

It was explained the agreement in all its practical applications becomes effective on Jan. 1, 1936, but, because of possible doubt that the government was empowered by existing statutes to execute the treaty in all its details, it will be subjected to the usual form of parliamentary procedure.

That there would be any difficulty in obtaining passage of the treaty through parliament seems remote. In the first place Mr. King has an unprecedented majority in the House of Commons. Secondly the treaty reflects practically complete realization of the proposals advanced by the last government.

There is a possibility that some changes in the intermediate tariff may be made, even increases, but it was not expected any such changes would be of a nature to which the United States would take exception.

Apart from those scheduled items on which Canada undertakes not to increase the existing duties during the term of the agreement, the Dominion retains complete fiscal autonomy and can raise or lower the intermediate tariff without violating the agreement.

DECLARES WAR ON SKUNKS

PLYMOUTH, Mass., Nov. 19.—(C.P.)—Charles Moning, Plymouth's official skunk catcher who recently was presented with badge, gun and amulet, reports 75 skunks were killed last week and, given another month, "we'll drive the last skunk from the residential district back into the tall woods."

P. S. Moning hasn't gone into action yet, Joseph Dupree of Halifax has been having so much fun making the kills. That is the "we" angle.

HUNTERS ATTENTION!

BEMIDJI, Minn., Nov. 19.—(C.P.)—When superintendent Roy P. Diamond failed to decoy the ducks of Diamond Point Park from a pond to winter pens, he soaked bread in alcohol and cast it on the water.

In one hour the flock of 47 ducks tired of uncertain diving and dizzy quacking and settled down to recover from the hangover. Smith then rounded them up with ease.

SHAMPOO WITH FIRE

PIETERSBURG, South Africa.—(C.P.)—Charged with intent to do serious bodily harm by pouring paraffin on a native's head and setting a match to it, Theunis Jacobus du Preez was fined $25 or one month's imprisonment when he appeared in court. The boy recovered.

Spent Millions In Mining Field

(By The Canadian Press)
TORONTO, Nov. 18.—Figures compiled by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in collaboration with the Ontario Mining and Canadian Metal Mining Association reveal that the Canadian mining industry expended more than $76,000,000 in 1934.

The total does not take into account the heavy output made by syndicates and prospectors in the work of exploring new fields. Ontario led the provinces in distribution of money for supplies wages, etc., paying out $35,000,000 or 46.1 per cent of the total.

said. The squadron was commanded by General Aimone. Count Ciano said of the engagement: "Baron Ostini, piloting the number five plane, returned to Asmara with his mechanic suffering from a fractured leg."

"The mechanic, however, scribbled notes to me on bloody cards such as 'they got me, but we got a huge number of them' and 'long live the Disperata (Desperate) squadron,' which he asked Ostini to give to me."

"Throughout the return flight, Ostini relief pilot, held a finger in a bullet hole in his gas tank. "We found each plane of the 20 had 10 or 15 bullet holes."

An official communique praised Il Duce's two sons.

"Attention is called to the heroism and disdain of danger demonstrated by all the personnel," it said.

"Particular mention must be made of Vittorio and Bruno Mussolini who, when their machine was hit, continued to fly with rifles carried in their plane."

ADDIS ABABA, Nov. 19.—Emperor Haile Selassie left by airplane before dawn today for a tour of Ethiopia's battle fronts. He took off after breakfast without lights. Two cases were adjourned. All cases were prosecuted by Mr. L. G. Lewis and brought by the R. C. M. P.—S.

It was the first time the monarch had left the capital since war clouds gathered over his country nearly a year ago. He departed at 8:45 a. m. in a twin-motored plane, escorted by two smaller planes. His destination remained secret.

The Emperor and his two daughters accompanied him to the airport.

In a final public statement to this writer, following an interview, the Emperor said: "Any discussions of peace with Italy at the present moment would be futile."

"No one seeks it more urgently than I, but at this moment it is perfectly useless to start peace negotiations on any basis, under any conditions whatsoever."

"This subject cannot be discussed so long as the invaders stand on our soil."

Ethiopia, he said, "is not being approached nor has it been approached on any project for peace" by Italy or a neutral.

For the interview the Emperor, his face drawn with weariness, received this correspondent in the barren throne room of the palace. With him were the young Crown Prince, Asfa Woson, who will be in charge while his father is away; the chief of the foreign office and an interpreter.

If economic sanctions could possibly bring about a situation which would force the country to stop making war, I am sure the hostilities would never have commenced," he said.

"Sanctions, however, will help us, for which we are most grateful. "I have been happily informed of the great sympathy for our cause in all the nations of the world but I also am unhappily aware that Italy would never have started invading our country if sanctions alone could have stopped her."

"I know only too well we ourselves must fight to save Ethiopia."

The Negus insisted his troops have not yet suffered defeat, for they "have not yet arrived at the front in their full strength. Until they do, claims of victories can only be empty boasts."

Study Mystery Of the Brain

By Howard W. Blakeslee, Associated Press Science Editor (By Guardian's Special Wire)
CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Nov. 19.—Electric signals detected for the first time coming from the supposed "executive" centre of the gray matter of the brain were described today by the National Academy of Sciences here.

The executive centre is part of the cortex or covering of the brain, a blanket of gray matter considered as the one development of evolution most responsible for man's superiority and for the high status of all the mammals.

Decoding these signals and tracing them to their source is a new experimental method of investigating the mysteries of the brain. The work was reported to the academy by J. G. Dussier De Barenne and W. S. McCullough of Yale University.

The experiments were conducted on monkeys whose cortex are similar to man's but about a half millimetre less in thickness.

The cortex is known from previous experiments to be a series of layers, one on top of the other like stacked sheets five to six in number. The three outer or top layers are by hypothesis verified to some extent by experiments as the reception centres or receiving rooms of the brain.

The layers beneath are called the executive centre. They are known to contain the cells, pyramidal in structure. That function in control of the body's movements.

The Yale scientists placed fine electrodes on the heads of monkeys in such manner that they picked up electrical signals coming from the cortex. The signals registered in a series of wave motions traced with a pen, after the electrical brain currents had been amplified 1,000,000 times.

Dr. De Barenne said that no interpretation of the relation of these electric signals to thought or other mental actions can be made at present.

Children require sufficient rest, and yet more children are deprived of this essential that suffer from other physical needs. Lack of rest leads to malnutrition, irritability and a whole train of undesirable physical and mental conditions. Play is just as necessary for the child as food. Play implies doing what the child wants to do, not what someone else considers he should do.

Parents with the best of intentions set out to plan the lives of their children. They may feel that they want to protect them against the difficulties which they themselves had to face. They have forgotten, or else they never knew, that if their child is to be a healthy, happy adult, we must grow up in the sense of becoming independent, able to stand on his own feet and to face the difficulties of life as they come along.

Intelligent guidance is desirable, but guidance must leave freedom to the child to make his own decisions and to learn that he must accept the consequences of his own acts. Opportunities for the child to do what he wants to do are part of his education.

It is not implied that the child is to be allowed to go unrestrained; the rights of others must also be considered. Indeed, one of the earliest things the child will learn is that he is but one of a group and that selfishness does not pay.

All this leads up to a suggestion that parents consider their child's needs rather than their own desires, and not to load them up with "extras" so that they have insufficient time for rest and play.

EXTRAS

It is always a question as to which one is really the more fortunate. We think of the children whose parents are economically able to give them opportunities to study music, dancing, et cetera, as being the lucky ones. They may be, but sometimes the "extras" are anything but good to them.

It is desirable for every child that he have an understanding of music because this increases for him the joy of living. It is also desirable to be possessed of the social graces, which include dancing, so that the individual may not be embarrassed in his social life.

Nevertheless, it is even more desirable that the child have sufficient rest, together with ample opportunity to do the things which he wants to do. These are essential to the physical and mental health of the child which are infinitely more important than are the extras.

Children require sufficient rest, and yet more children are deprived of this essential that suffer from other physical needs. Lack of rest leads to malnutrition, irritability and a whole train of undesirable physical and mental conditions. Play is just as necessary for the child as food. Play implies doing what the child wants to do, not what someone else considers he should do.
